Back Bay group forms; Oceanfront chapter could triple in size

By Heidi Kettler
Staff Writer

New blood is being injected into the local presence of the Jaycees.

As a result, new chapters are sprouting up in Chesapeake, Virginia Beach and Portsmouth. Some existing ones, such as the Oceanfront Jaycees in Virginia Beach and the Great Bridge Jaycees in Chesapeake, are rejuvenating themselves.

Paul J. Anninos, 33, who has been a Virginia Beach Jaycees member for four years, is the heartbeat of the reawakening. As the 1987-88 director for the Virginia Jaycees Atlantic Region, Anninos has attempted to put new life into the 14 chapters he oversees. With his term nearing completion, the fruits of his past year's efforts are now being realized.

The newly formed Olde Towne Jaycees of Portsmouth brought to two the number of chapters in Portsmouth. The Portsmouth Jaycees, owner-operators of the Pokey Smokey miniature train, has existed in Portsmouth for close to 40 years.

The new group met recently to elect officers, induct and orient new members and to decide on the group name. With an initial recruitment of about 25 members, Anninos expects the chapter to recruit a core group of 50 to 60 members by the time it earns its charter from the U.S. Jaycees.

In Virginia Beach, the Back Bay Jaycees for young professionals in Pungo and Sandbridge has formed, and the existing Oceanfront Jaycees is getting a boost by soliciting more young members. The Virginia Beach Jaycees, formed about 40 years ago, like the Norfolk Jaycees, continues to be one of the region's strongest chapters with about 330 members, according to Anninos.

The new group in Chesapeake is the Goose Creek Jaycees, which is the smallest chapter in the area with 20 members, according to Anninos, who said new groups should aim for 70 to 80 members at best. The Great Bridge Jaycees, which has existed in Chesapeake since the early 1960s, has agreed to conduct a new membership campaign. Although the group has regularly sponsored worthwhile community projects, Anninos said, membership has dwindled and a small core of 12 to 13 active members has been doing the bulk of the work.

The Chesapeake Jaycees, like the Portsmouth Jaycees, on the other hand, has chosen to maintain its current direction, with little guidance from Anninos in increasing its membership rolls.

Virginia Beach Jaycees have in past year's ranked high in membership among other state organizations. This year, however, the national Jaycees conference is being hosted in Richmond, and a campaign to rejuvenate chapters throughout Larry R. Coley, a general insurance agent in Virginia Beach submitted this picture to The Virginia Beach Sun. He received the picture from a friend.

Indian River resident Red Radford, 55, has been hunting all his life. That's why sometimes it might be expected that he gets a little tuckered out on the hunt. Recently, Radford, an independent roofer, and about 60 other hunters visited one of their favorite hunting spots, the Sunbeam Hunt Club, in Southampton County. They had been out for some time when Radford stopped in the early afternoon to rest under a tree for an hour or two. His hunting buddies were in another section of the woods, he said, and the only person nearby to see the deer approach was a photographer from the hunt club. Radford said he didn't know the photographer's name, but Radford says pictures like the one above are taken all the time. Radford says he usually gets a deer or two a year. But this one got away safely.

Good news and bad news

Beach property worth more but real estate taxes higher

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

Your Virginia Beach property is worth more this year than last, except for 19 percent of the parcels in the city.

The other side of the coin is that you'll have to pay more in real estate taxes this year than last.

By now most of the city's taxpayers should have received notices from Real Estate Assessor J. D. Banagan informing them of their assessments.

The news he told City Council Monday was that assessments for 1989 of $14,296,000,000 will generate $130,810,000 in revenue at the 1989 real estate tax rate of $1.915 per $100 of assessed value.

City Manager Aubrey V. Watts Jr. reminded Council that the entire $131 million would not be available for the operation of the city because 11 1/2 percent has been earmarked for other uses such as schools, highways and recreation centers approved in the November referendum.

The first half of the real estate taxes based on the 1989 rate is due Dec. 5 and the second half is due on June 5, 1989.

Say your $95,000 house (1988 assessment) was assessed 5.19 percent more — that's the average increase for residential property. That's an increase of $4,930 or an assessment of $99,931. At the 915 tax rate your taxes for a year will be $914 or an increase of $45.

New construction, which amounts to approximately 3.7 percent of the tax base, Banagan said, amounted to $511,768,000 for the past 12 months representing a decrease from the previous year of $170,543,000 or 25 percent. Banagan said that new construction will drop 25 percent next year as well.

Except for the 19 parcels that showed no increase in value, assessment increases ranged from approximately three to 15 percent, with four percent of the parcels showing an increase greater than 15 percent. These properties, he said, certainly include waterfront residences and vacant commercial acreage.

The overall average increase for all types of property is 5.44 percent with the median increase at 4.12 percent. The residential average increase was 5.19 percent while the apartment average actually decreased by .22 percent because of the high vacancy rates and the changes in the income tax laws. The increase for commercial/industrial property was 7.31 percent.

Of all residences 44.5 percent were assessed at less than $75,000 and 2.3 percent assessed over $250,000. The remainder fall in between.

The average assessment for all 102,147 residences in the city was $95,300 with single-family homes, 73,747, making up 7.2 percent of the total.

Banagan said the city was moving in the right direction with a greater share of the property values going into commercial, hotel, office and industrial

"Variety Store" removed from CZO; HMP report reviewed

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

The demise of the variety store may have started back when the five and ten store became anachronism as the former "dime" stores evolved into full-fledged and higher-priced department stores.

But the Virginia Beach City Council is making the extinction official by removing the term "variety store" from the Comprehensive Zoning Ordinance.

Variety store is a nebulous term, remarked Planning Director Robert Scott at a CZO work-

"Now they're called grocery stores," quipped Vice Mayor Meyera Oberndorf.

Councilwoman Barbara Henley, who with Councilwomen Reba McClanan and Nancy Parker made up a Council committee on the CZO, said that the functions of variety stores will be shifted to other categories.

So goes the variety store the way of the general store leaving generations of children to wonder what the child in the poem meant when he said that when he grew up he wanted to own a general

Personality Profile

Pat Bridges shows concern for aesthetics in Virginia Beach

By Valerie Olander
Staff Writer

Last Spring B. H. "Pat" Bridges was selected the first citizen of Virginia Beach by the Jaycees for his involvement in community aesthetics.

At the award dinner he gave a short acceptance speech and offered the citizens of Virginia Beach a challenge. The challenge — to make Virginia Beach the most beautiful city in America by the year 2000. A goal that Bridges developed when he was chairman of the community aesthetics committee, formed from the Virginia Beach Tomorrow Study.

The challenge was taken by a tall slender man sitting in the audience. After the idea rolled around in the man's head for a few days he called Bridges to tell him that he thought it was a worthy goal. The man, Mayor Robert Jones, then set up a Task Force on the City's Appearance, which Bridges would chair.

"People are seeing their community as less attractive. The tides are turning and the attitudes are turning around. People are making suggestions," — Pat Bridges

The Task Force began with two public hearings and then separated into four subcommittees: architecture and zoning; highways; waterways, trails and greenbelts; and horticulture and lands. Bridges oversees the 16 committee members and maintains the rapport of the group.

Bridges said the biggest problem facing the city's appearance is "the mind-set of the citizens." He said that when he visited Europe he saw how clean the towns were and there was an absence of billboards. He was impressed with the people being active in the community and appreciating their towns. He does see the attitude of Beach residents changing.

"People are seeing their community as less attractive. The tides are turning and the attitudes are turning around. People are making suggestions," he said.

"I am concerned about what has happened to downgrade the city," he said referring to what he calls the "ugly construction allowed on Virginia Beach Boulevard."

"From London Bridge to the Oceanfront is a depressing ride," he added. "The city government is not strict enough."

Bridges did say that good things are beginning to happen in the Oceanfront area such as the recent provision that city officials are enforcing to remove gaudy encroachments such as signs, canopies, marquees and what ever else is garishly hanging over the Oceanfront sidewalks. The boardwalk is also in the process of receiving a face lift.

Bridges said that the buck is stopping in Richmond and local communities are suffering.

"The tree protection legislation was stymied by the General Assembly. Richmond is part of the problem," he said. "The General Assembly is keeping the money in Rich-

Signs

Hanging out at the Beach

Hanging out at the Beach these days is illegal according to city inspectors — if you own a merchant sign.

The inspectors are ordering Oceanfront signs, awnings, canopies and marquees to come down if they hang out over the sidewalk.

Most of the illegal signs were erected 20 or 30 years ago have become an eyesore, which left officials looking for ways to remove them. Looking for a law, they found a provision under the state that says all encroachments into the public right of way — including 12 feet above — are considered temporary and the city may request that they be removed at any time.

The gaudy clutter of neon signs and things that go blink in the night won't be missed on the resort strip. Virginia Beach has its own glitter and glamour without the help of large tacky signs.

The business owners have until May 4 to take down the signs or they will face a fine of up to $500 each day that the encroachment remains.

Sluggishly merchants have been cooperating. Only 15 of 217 illegal signs have been removed. It is expected that the pace will pick up as soon as the spring arrives and shopowners return.

Not many businesses have complained. Only eight have asked for encroachment permits that are issued on a case-by-case basis by the City Council.

No one has legally challenged the city's actions either.

The gaudy clutter of neon signs and things that go blink in the night won't be missed on the resort strip. Virginia Beach has its own glitter and glamour without the help of large tacky signs. — V.A.O.

Truck ordinance

Falling debris hazardous

Truckers better cover their loads. The new truck ordinance requiring tarps for trucks is in effect.

The ordinance is far from welcomed by truckers. Despite the private companies' complaints of costs, inconvenience and dangers to drivers, who could slip from the side of the truck while trying to attach the covers.

The ordinance may seem unimportant to some but it actually could save a life and also clean up the debris on the highways.

The ordinance was passed, although motorists who have had debris fall on their cars, shattering their windshield and damaging their paint have similar complaints of costs, inconvenience and dangers to them as drivers.

Truckers complain that the cost of a tarp could be as much as $400 and last six months or less. Most motorists feel that replacing their windshield and/or other damages that falling debris could cause could add up to the same amount. The cost of a life lost in an accident from falling debris also costs much more.

The inconvenience of putting a cover on a truck could also save the trucker the inconvenience of a lawsuit. The inconvenience of items falling from a truck is also hazardous to motorists.

The dangers are only obvious to a motorist. The danger is going to affect a motorist on the highway in more cases than a truck driver falling off the side of a truck while trying to attach the cover.

Reader agrees with commentary on media, politicians

Editor:

Let me thank you for your excellent editorial (The Virginia Beach Sun, Feb. 24) entitled, "No Love Lost: Media vs. Politicians."

I am in agreement with every word you wrote.

Nothing seems more complex and confusing to the general public than local, state, and federal politics.

On a state level, as well as federal and sometimes local level, one must be an attorney to get elected. Then these lawmakers pass laws which first and foremost protect their own interests. This seems to be the year for political promises. Political promises do not shock me. What shocks me is that so many believe these political promises.

On a national level, the thing that bothers me is the fact that taxpayers foot the bill for the presidential hopefuls to fly around the nation saying more and more about less and less. Millions of dollars of tax money is being spent on those who have no chance of becoming president. It's a long time between now and November, and I, for one, dread all the TV ads I've got to wade through, plus all the political rhetoric. Ther. some say sermons are boring!

Members of the Tidewater Presidents Council of Women's Clubs went deep sea fishing last week. No, the clubwomen didn't go on a boating excursion; they toured the Virginia Marine Science Museum in Virginia Beach.

It was a lengthy procession as members "oohed and ahed" their way along corridors punctuated with huge aquariums filled with sea life. Sparkling-hued fish, large and small, swam back and forth in seemingly endless circles, pausing momentarily to fix large, glassy-eyed stares at the human species peering from the other side.

It proved to be, as museum director, C. Mac Raws, had advised: "An educational experience." Educational as well as entertaining, for most of the club visitors, the museum visit was a

Off the Record

By Valerie A. Olander

This week's column is written by Heidi Ketter.

Writing block

It seems I have been suffering from a bout with hiccups. So, it is a good thing I can count on Val Olander to fill in for a week or two of Off the Records. Now, she's got the hiccups and I am forced to return, hoping the creative juices will soon begin to flow.

Sometimes, like now, when the mind draws an absolute blank, and the pressure of deadlines is on, I feel like the coyote in The Roadrunner cartoon, who finds himself a million feet above a canyon with nothing to hang on to. Meaning, I better think of something quick, or else.

Then, there are times, like right now, that remind me of who, while blind as a bat, manages to drive his car from one end of the town to the other regardless of the road surfaces. Meaning, sometimes creative writing for me starts with no theme and somehow resolves into a story, and I arrive safely at my destination — the end.

That is what I am attempting here. I guess I still haven't fully recovered from the hiccups. Speaking of which hiccups are something I wouldn't wish on my worst enemy. What are they anyway? Some sort of muscle spasm like those mysterious twitches that attack the eyelids?

Poor Val, she's at it again. I didn't realize hiccups were so contagious. Maybe the boss will get them.

Val's remedy for hiccups is drinking from a straw that is pointed away from her mouth. It sounds ridiculous, but she says it works. Myself, I chock down a teaspoon of sugar. It never fails. I also learned there is some medicinal value in drinking water from a glass containing a knife. But, that's even more bizarre than Val's method.

Val and I work side by side here at the newspaper. Actually, it's back to side. My back to her left side. If I didn't stop typing all day and turn around to say "hi," I'd never see Val; just hear her typing away.

Thoughts must be pouring out of Val by the steady beat of her typewriter. She's pounding away. In a way it's an incentive, sort of like having a running partner to help you keep the pace.

She really doesn't seem to be mentally hampered by the hiccups. Just wait until she gets them while trying to talk to someone over the phone. That's enough to set a person in a panic.

I have never seen Val in a panic. I haven't known her all that long, but she seems like the person who could remain calm, cool and collected standing in a pit of rattlesnakes. Naw. She wouldn't be calm, cool and collected. She might look like it, but she would have to be screaming inside.

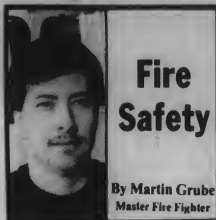

The room has quieted down. Val's leafing through the dictionary, that all essential resource. My dictionary has been used so much that it is now in three parts. I now know to pick up the first for words falling in "A" through "I" and thereabouts; the second for letter "J" words through the mid "S's" and the third the skinniest section, for the end of the alphabet.

I should just throw it all away and purchase a new dictionary, but I tend to be such a sentimentalist. I share the same feelings toward this old Olympia typewriter, even though someone should shoot it to put it out of its misery.

Speaking of misery, Val's got the hiccup again. How's that for an ending.

Where there's smoke — there's fire

Fire Safety

By Martin Grube
Master Fire Fighter

Have you ever smelled smoke in your home or place of work? What did you do, did you look around the room for signs of fire? Did you tell anyone about the smell? Please read this carefully and share the information with a friend or neighbor. It will give them something to think about.

If you are at home and smell smoke, quickly look from room to room to isolate where it may be coming from. In the kitchen, check the dishwasher drying element for plastic lids that may have fallen from the dish rack. Check the trash can for discarded cigarette butts — get out of this habit at once. Never put ashes in the toilet. If you have dropped food on the stove element, it will burn off quickly but puts off a lot of smoke. Check other rooms for overloaded sockets where the wiring may be shorting out. Never leave an electric blanket on. They short out and smoulder for hours undetected.

At work, check overloaded sockets. Sometimes due to the limited number of sockets and many office machines, employers and employees tend to purchase cluster sockets. A cluster socket allows you to run three machines off of one plug. Don't forget about those fluorescent lights. When the ballast gets old, (the ballast is the electrical device used in the light case to regulate the power going to the bulbs) it has a tendency to overheat, melt and put off a horrible smell. Call an electrician at once.

If you have made every attempt to find the source of the smoke within several minutes and found nothing, call your fire department at once. This is a serious problem. Firefighters were recently called to a home for an odor of smoke. The woman smelled the smoke before she left for work. She checked the house and found nothing so she went on to work. After a short time at work she became concerned and called the fire department. The firefighters arrived to her home, broke in with minimal damage and found the heating element in the waterbed had shorted out. If she had not called the fire department, the wiring to her waterbed could have burst into flames and destroyed her home.

If you are at a restaurant or any place of assembly, a theater or large department store and you smell smoke, report it to a manager. Don't just tell the first person you come to, ask for the manager and ask for their name. This will put pressure on that individual to look into the situation.

On the night of Nov. 28, 1942, over 1,000 people gathered into the Coconut Grove nightclub in downtown Boston. A small fire broke out in the dance area and many people just sat and watched the flames thinking it would be extinguished quickly.

As the flames spread rapidly, panic stricken guests ran for the only exits they knew, the one they came in. (Always look around any room you enter for a second exit). Some guests managed to run out of the building, others weren't so lucky. Their charred remains were brought out in body bags by the Boston firefighters. 492 people died in that tragic fire.

Another blaze in which people failed to take the odor of smoke seriously was the Beverly Hills Supper Club in Southgate, Kentucky. On a clear spring night, May 28, 1977, more than 300 people were gathered inside this restaurant for a night of entertainment and dinner. A busboy jumped onto a stage during a comedy act and stated there was a fire and pointed to the exits. The patrons thought it was part of the act and stayed in their seats. The lights went out and black smoke poured into the room. 165 people perished in that fire.

Where there's smoke — there's fire. Check it out, tell someone in authority or call the fire department. There is no excuse for fire related deaths in a civilization equipped with smoke detectors, heat detectors and a telephone in almost every room you enter. When in doubt, call 911. The life you save may be your own.

Educational issues highlight City Council forum

Full funding of the school budget! Funding lower class sizes! Moving teachers' salaries into the top ten of the nation! Use of tuition tax credits for elementary and secondary schools.

These, and many others, are crucial issues that will be discussed in a pre-election forum for candidates for City Council and Mayor on March 9 at 4:45 p.m. at Plaza Junior High, 3080 S. Lynnhaven Road.

Sponsored by the Virginia Beach Education Association, the forum will concentrate on issues that affect education and educators in Virginia Beach. The public is invited to attend.

Over the past several years, VBEA has led the way to make education a top priority in Virginia Beach and one of the ways to do this is to make the general public as aware as possible of the issues involved and how each candidate stands on those issues.

uses — 20.8 percent for 1989 compared to 19.9 in 1987. Also of the total new construction January 1987 through December 1987, $116,548,525 or 22.8 percent was in commercial, hotels, offices, and industrial uses.

Virginia Beach also is increasing its ratio of assessments against sales. The 1986 assessment/sales ratio was 88.4 percent compared to 87.5 in 1985 and 80.5 percent in 1980.

Of the six Hampton Roads cities, Virginia Beach is fourth highest after Chesapeake and Newport News.

Lynnhaven Borough has the highest total assessment — $4,440,917,708, an increase of 10.2 percent over the previous year, but Princess Anne, with an assessment of $1,640,867,318 had the greatest increase — 17.1 percent.

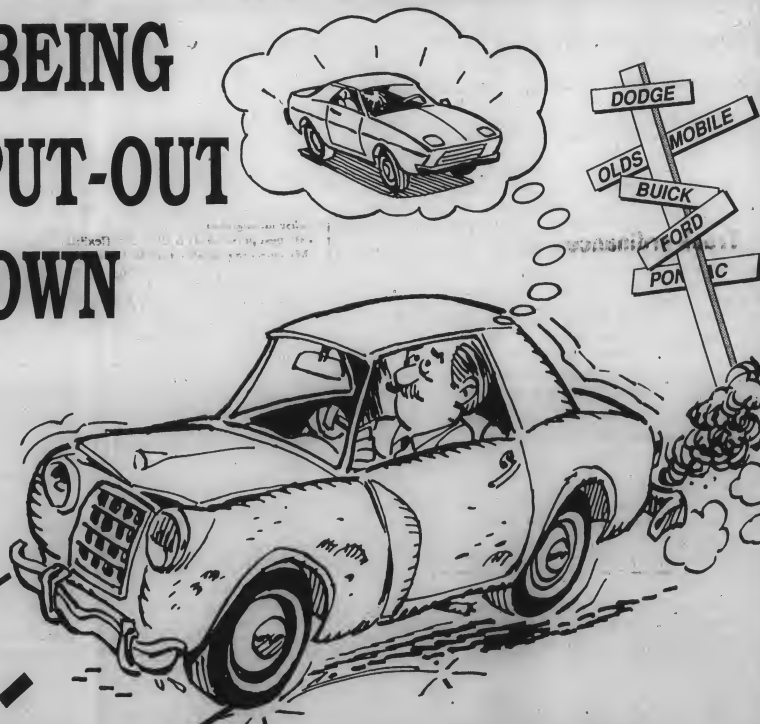

Increases in Blackwater (12.7 percent) and Pungo (10.9 percent) are attributed to small acreage tracts. Most of the property in Blackwater and Pungo is in the city's land use program.

Deferred tax for 1988 on the land use program amounts to $2,143,059.

The real estate tax exemption, deferral or freeze for senior citizens and disabled persons will come to $303,194.70 for 1988.

Also, 1,675 parcels representing a value of $2,006,893,922 are tax exempt. These include land owned by the Federal, State, regional and local governments, religious organizations, charitable and benevolent organizations, educational institutions, fire and rescue units and cemeteries.

"Health Info"

Three physicians will take part in a panel discussion of "Health Information from the Edgar Cayce Readings: Theory and Practice" on Sunday, Feb. 28, at 2:30 p.m. in the main auditorium of the Association for Research and Enlightenment, Inc., 67th Street and Atlantic Avenue.

The panel, the second in a series of five 1988 Sunday Forums sponsored by A.R.E., is open to the public at no charge.

Dr. Robert Brewer will discuss surgery as an important part of the holistic approach to healing and Dr. Eric Mein will present the basic principles upon which the Edgar Cayce physical readings are based and will describe the major therapies in the readings.

Dr. Robert Nash will speak on the pathways to healing which are emphasized in the Cayce readings, namely, to find one's purpose in life, to accept responsibility for one's life, and to acknowledge the importance of love in one's life.

Mrs. Phyllis Embleton, a long-time student of the Cayce readings and a frequent A.R.E. lecturer, will provide an overview of the healing concepts in the Cayce readings including diet, remedies, and attitudes.

Dr. James C. Windsor, president of Atlantic University and the Edgar Cayce Foundation, will moderate the panel.

Francis Land House presented with a gift

Mary Russo, chairman of the Board of Governors of the Francis Land House, accepted an accolade for the house at a recent meeting of the Constitution's Celebration Commission at the Virginia Beach City Hall.

It was presented by Johnnie Miller, Commission member and former chairman of the Council of Garden Clubs, and Roger Huff, the city's tree arborist. The historic poster is a gift of the Commission, and will serve as a reminder of the city's participation as one of the 100 municipalities in the nation to be selected to receive seedlings from famous or historic trees.

Several seedlings to be planted in the historic grove at the Francis Land House will be taken from trees that were living at the time the U.S. Constitution was written. The grove, dedicated last July during a Naturalization Ceremony, will provide a living legacy to commemorate the Bicentennial of the Constitution.

All the trees to be planted have a long history. The Black Walnut, for example, grows on one of George Washington's estates along the Potomac. The Southern Catalpa trees line the Palace Greene in Williamsburg. Other trees to be included in the project were Death Valley Mountain Ash, Black Locusts, and the Liberty (a willow oak).

The constitutional commemorative will be placed in the Francis Land House.

Education

Six schools win recognition for drug abuse programs

The substance abuse programs at six Virginia Beach public schools have been recognized as "outstanding" during the second phase of the school division's year-long campaign against substance abuse, "Communities and Schools Without Drugs — The Challenge."

Winning recognition and $300 to help promote their programs were Creeds Elementary and Lynnhaven Junior High in Area I, Thalia Elementary and Great Neck Junior High in Area II, and Kempville Meadows Elementary and Kempville Junior High in Area III.

To win the awards, the six schools developed ongoing programs during November, the month that all schools were encouraged to participate in a division-wide promotion against substance abuse.

Creeds Elementary holds monthly activities involving "Just Say No" and REACH students from Kellam High and family nights involving the Police Department, PTA, and student groups.

Lynnhaven Junior High uses monthly activities to teach students such skills as how to resist peer pressure, enhance decision-making, and emphasize values. Responsible Educated Youth Can Help (REACH) America students also are involved in the activities.

Thalia Elementary instituted S.A.S.A. (Students Against Substance Abuse) and P.A.S.A. (Parents Against Substance Abuse). Students and parents are encouraged to write letters asking more information about drug abuse; replies to student questions from experts are published in the school newsletter, and replies to parents are published in the PTA newsletter.

Parents of Great Neck Junior High students have been asked to sign a pledge to not allow parties with drugs and alcohol in their homes, and each month REACH students prepare a bulletin on a different drug.

Community leaders have been invited to Kempville Elementary to offer active alternatives to drug and alcohol abuse. The school also developed educational programs, a "Schools Without Drugs" bulletin board, a "Just Say No" club, and established goals for responsible behavior and self-esteem in each student, class, and grade level.

"Kempville Braves R 2 Cool 4 Drugs" bumper stickers are one way Kempville Junior High is emphasizing its drug abuse education program. The winning entry in a poster contest will be printed as a book cover by the school's Adopt-A-School partner, all in the hopes that students will meet "The Challenge" for this school year and beyond.

Phase I winners for their activities during the November 16 through 20 "Get It Straight — Accept the Challenge Week" were Plaza Elementary and Plaza Junior High in Area I, Thoroughgood Elementary and Great Neck Junior High in Area II, and Kempville Meadows Elementary and Kempville High in Area III.

The third phase in the competition will end May 13. Awards will be given for the single most valuable project (MVP) which was completed during the entire substance abuse education program. MVP winners from each area will receive $500; awards will be made on May 20.

HMP Report

Council Monday concluded its review of the HMP (Henley, McClanan, Parker) report with a work session Monday.

The Planning Commission has recommended new designations for the resort district — Resort Tourist District (RT-4, RT-3, RT-2 and RT-1), but the committee has recommended the elimination of RT-4 with its uses assigned to parallel categories such as A-1 to A-12 or R-7 to R-5s. The C-1 (Commercial) District has been eliminated altogether with C-1 properties changed to RT-3. In the old C-1 District, multi-family development is a conditional use, while in RT-3 it is permitted by right.

The committee has recommended that the proposed resort tourist area currently zoned C-1, B-4 or B-5 be converted to the RT-3 Resort Tourist District. Parcels with other zoning designations would be converted Scott said that the problem with parking in the motel-hotel district has been that only one space is required for every two units as in the industrial district. The proposal is for one space per unit. Also, front setbacks would be increased from 25 to 30 feet and minimum lot widths from 50 to 100 feet.

Scott said that in making changes, the Planning Commission wanted to make sure it did not downzone property. At the same time the Commission did not want to upzone property. The changes proposed in the resort area have been moderate, he said.

Scott added that the city is better off with the development of a large tract rather than smaller tracts.

Scott said that the area between the Pavilion and the resort area, which would be zoned RT-3, should not be a chain of apartment buildings, but should include a mix of business and apartments to promote pedestrian use.

Issues

On March 9, each candidate will have time to make an opening statement about his or her candidacy, and then be available for questions from the floor. If there is time, some candidate debate may take place. This will be the first time that citizens will have a chance to see all of the candidates together and to compare, not only their answers, but their personal bearing, mannerisms, and reaction under fire.

Are you interested in what alternative sources of revenue each candidate would tap? If federal sources dry up? Would this mean new taxes? Do you want to know which candidate will pursue an aggressive Capital Improvements Program to keep up with projected enrollments? What criteria should each council member use in appointing school board members?

These are just a few of the questions that may surface in this forum. Answers to these and many other questions will help determine who will be endorsed by the Virginia Beach Education Association Political Action Committee.

An extensive process is used by VBEA-PACE before making an endorsement, including the use of questionnaires and personal interviews. As president of the VBEA, I invite you to bring your questions and participate in this important forum. Let them know you care. Mark your calendar: March 9, Plaza Junior High Auditorium 4:45 p.m.

VWC presents A Little Hotel on the Side

The Virginia Wesleyan College Theater Department is presenting A Little Hotel on the Side continuing through March 1 to 5 at 8 p.m. in the college's Hofheimer Theater.

is staging John Mortimer's new translation, which was first presented in the Oliver Theater in August 1984.

The setting of the play is Paris, just after the turn of the century. According to a press release, the story is described by critics as hilarious, rollicking, gloriously ribald, witty, containing "all of the classic Feydeau ingredients of thwarted lust, spiraling panic, and a seedy hotel where the corridors see more action than the beds."

Director Bently Anderson is also serving as set designer. The technical director is Angela Winters of Norfolk, and the assistant director is M. Shirley Hurt of Virginia Beach.

Members of the cast include: Kenneth Higgins, Kimberly Hood, Kenny Haller, Susie Warner, Matt Sutherland, Jacinta Coggin, Bill Warner, Lynn Ann Emond, Sarah Owen, and Pat Sullivan, all of Virginia Beach.

tour of several American cities. These concerts are being sponsored by Atlantic VMW, which will have some of their new line on display in the Pavilion atrium.

first. In introductory remarks, Rawls praised particularly the Virginia Beach and Norfolk clubwomen for interest and support. He was grateful, also, Rawls said, for the volunteer services of some clubwomen who assist as museum guides. The director emphasized the fact that it was the intent of the museum organization to encourage through learning experiences, a public desire to protect and promote the preservation of the environment.

The museum director's enthusiasm has proven to be contagious to at least one of the club volunteers, Betsy Doxey, of the Cape Henry Woman's Club. Mrs. Doxey, chairwoman of the President's Council tour event, said that her museum interest had developed from a volunteer status to that of a paid employee. She said that since the museum opened in June 1986, more than 300,000 visitors had toured the facility.

The Tidewater Presidents' Council incorporates women's clubs ranging from Williamsburg to Chesapeake. Club representatives meet periodically for fellowship and to exchange project and service ideas.

The museum tour and luncheon at the Fogg Seafood Restaurant was hosted by the Virginia Beach Junior Woman's Club with members creating complementary desserts.

In a moment of business, the council elected officers for the coming term including: Mrs. Doxey, president; Mrs. David Falls, Poquoson Woman's Club, vice president; Mrs. James Craig, Virginia Beach Junior Woman's Club, secretary-treasurer; and Rita Costello, Woman's Club of Portsmouth, corresponding secretary. Mrs. Doxey will succeed Shirley Robertson in the council presidency.

Bridges

mond." Bridges said that the appearance of the city is detrimental to tourism, business and the community pride.

Bridges is a self-employed landscape architect. For 34 years he has concerned himself with the appearance of his community.

"I felt as I was growing up I liked creative things. I thought I would enjoy a creative occupation," he said.

In Bridges' office is an architectural work table where he designs public driveways, walks, erosion control and outdoor lighting. He utilizes outdoor space with plants and other materials to incorporate a pleasant setting.

Behind the geometric designs is much more than a pleasing appearance but also much thought and hard work. A present design that he is working on utilizes trees which are strategically placed for the direction of the sun. Trees in the west will block the hot sun from the parking lot alleviating hot humid cars.

Bridges has been a resident of Virginia Beach all of his life. He graduated from Kempsville High School in 1945. He attended three semesters at Virginia Military Institute (VMI) and then decided to join the Army in 1946 to get the G.I. bill. He served 18 months as a quartermaster school instructor at Camp Lee, which is presently Fort Lee.

Following his 18 months in the Army he attended the University of Maryland studying landscape and horticulture. After two years called back into the Army for the Korean War. He finally received a bachelor of science in 1953 and began landscaping in Virginia Beach.

From 1968 until 1975 Bridges taught the school of horticulture and landscape design at Norfolk Botanical Gardens for the Norfolk city schools.

During the seven years that he was teaching he was also moonlighting and drawing landscape designs. Bridges drew the master plans for the Municipal Center in 1970-71. The first major complex had five buildings.

Bridges also recommended one of his students to implement the plan at the Municipal Center. The student, Edward S. Barnes, presently works for the city Department of Landscaping Services.

Bridges has been playing an active role in the community for quite some time. He has been a member of the Rotary Club for 32 years and is also past president. He has been active with the Board of Zoning Appeals for 15 to 20 years. He was vice president of the Virginia Beach Beautification Committee for 15 years and the president for three years. He is also involved with the Clean Community Commission; the Virginia Beach United Methodist Church, where he teaches a horticulture class and helps to beautify the church grounds; and has also been president of the Virginia Beach Sports Club.

Although Bridges is conscious of the appearance of the city he thinks that the state's recent action to ban the Shamrock Motel from Seashore State Park because of trampled plants and trash that people leave in the park is "ridiculous."

Bridges helped Jerry Bocrie, the founder and president of the Tidewater Striders, start the race in 1972. Bridges was a member of the Rotary Club at the time and Bocrie had needed a civic group sponsor to get a race under way.

Although Bridges helped to organize the Shamrock Marathon and has been involved in the planning he has never run in the race. Bridges said that one of his ambitions is to run the 2.62 mile race.

Bridges said that if the state plans to prohibit the race because of the defiling of the park they might as well "let the kudzu vine take over." Kudzu is a Japanese vine that is planted for forage.

An alternative route is planned just in case the state doesn't reverse its decision in time for the marathon.

As for the Task Force on the City's Appearance he said a lot is being accomplished. The subcommittee chairman met about every two weeks with Bridges.

"When you get people with enthusiasm to work together, the good will come out," he said.

A preliminary report is expected by March 15. The subcommittee will then do an elaboration and submit a final report after the mayoral elections. The disbandment of the Task Force is pending. Bridges said that someone may be needed to monitor the actions that need to be taken or else it would gather dust.

the state has been instituted to ensure Virginia Jaycees' stronghold in the nation, according to a Norfolk Jaycees spokesman.

With this in mind, when Anninos, immediate past president of the Virginia Beach Jaycees, accepted the volunteer position as regional director, he said he wanted to generate feeling of identity among all chapters in the Atlantic region and to help the region grow as a whole. His dream, he said, is to make the Jaycees "more of a household word" — an organization that would be the first to come to mind as one for young professionals.

Professionals 21 to 40 years old can sharpen their skills through the Jaycees leadership program while helping the community, said Anninos. The organization teaches young people early on that community service is important, he said, adding that a lot of people don't think about that until later in life.

The benefits of Jaycees membership, said Anninos, a commercial sales representative for a major real estate firm, is that activities have a direct application to what members do in their professional life. He said members learn such skills as leadership, project and small group management and public speaking. Social interaction is incorporated and members also have the advantage of networking with other young business leaders, Anninos said.

"Chapters do die and they die for one reason. People forget to ask new people to join the organization," — Anninos.

"The upper age limit is clearly to keep ideas coming in from younger members," said Anninos. So continuous emphasis on new membership is essential to maintaining the vitality and effectiveness of the chapters, Anninos said. "Chapters do die and they die for one reason. People forget to ask new people to join the organization," he said. The chapters then shrink and stifle themselves.

The Jaycees is a dynamic organization, Anninos explained. The members are on the go and their priorities gradually change. "The most vibrant and energetic" chapters are those that can keep generating new members, said Anninos, who joined the Virginia Beach Jaycees upon a cousin's invitation.

The Great Bridge Jaycees recognized that it needed to rejuvenate itself, said Anninos. "Over time the people aged out of the organization," he said.

Anninos said he could help the organization because he was "not afraid to ask people to join." During the next 60 to 90 days, Anninos said, the group will be conducting a major recruitment drive and he expects it to grow from its current 25 members to as many as 60. "I think it is going to take off like mad," to the point where it might even have to keep people away, he said. "People, the young people, are thirsty for a community service organization," he said.

Anninos said his efforts to strengthen the local Jaycees' presence has been "surprisingly easy." "I look for the best opportunities and work on those first. My time is limited. I saw four or five opportunities this year," he said.

His "high priority" was to identify "strong" population areas not currently being served by an existing Jaycees chapter, said Anninos. Potential service areas were particularly evident in Great Bridge, downtown Portsmouth and the Virginia Beach oceanfront.

He saw a great potential for the Great Bridge Jaycees because of the development over the last two years of Battlefield Boulevard. "The tremendous base to draw from" had been untapped, he said. "It's taken (the chapter) the first half of the year to come to the realization that they have to make a move," but now, said Anninos, members are excited about the chapter's growth potential. Anninos envisions that other Chesapeake community leaders will come to the Jaycees for help in such projects as the Chesapeake Jubilee.

Anninos recognized another "obvious group of people" to target for membership in the existing Oceanfront Jaycees. He said he had "tremendous response." There were 17 members at the first meeting a month ago, and, by the end of April, he expects the chapter to have 70 to 80 members, tripling in size in three months. Anninos said the group will be able to work on such community projects as beautification of the resort strip. It could also assist the Resort Area Advisory Commission on issues "it has been mulling over for years."

Anninos keyed in on downtown Portsmouth, where rehabilitation had revitalized the business community and was drawing more people to live and work in the area. He noted the "tight knit" group of young people who shared pride in their city. "It was a real opportunity," Anninos said.

The challenge in Portsmouth was that the city already boasted many active organizations. Anninos, however, was certain that the unique aspect of the Jaycees — that it was a group for young professionals — would set it apart.

"I didn't know a soul in downtown Portsmouth, Anninos said when he set out to explore the possibility of a new chapter by talking with Portsmouth business leaders. He found a strong showing of support. Within three to five days, he said he had identified 20 potential members, the required number to start a new chapter. He called the group "talented and upbeat."

Anninos noted that two organizations can co-exist in one city, also is the case in Chesapeake and Virginia Beach and now in Portsmouth. In Richmond, he said, there are a dozen chapters.

Jaycees chapters become popular and garner the most respect when they promote "a sense of community," said Anninos. He feels that the Olde Towne Jaycees of Portsmouth already has a keen sense of community. He said he found in the group "people who really care about what they are doing in their professions and where they live."

There is something for everyone in the Jaycees, said Anninos, and the chapters try to draw members representing a variety of occupations, which adds to the learning experience.

One of the most obvious reasons why people join, said Anninos, is because they have had a positive experience with the group. "It's a positive group of folks," said Anninos, and people perceive that they are going to enjoy working with them. "We work too hard and too long hours to give free time to an organization where we wouldn't have fun," he said.

He emphasized that underlying it all is the opportunity to give something back to the community. And "we take an awful lot," he pointed out. "We bank our successes on a lot of folks giving a little bit of time toward a goal."

Anninos said he has seen a lot of strides being made this year in efforts to revitalize local Jaycees and in name recognition. "More people are familiar with the kind of things the Jaycees does," he said.

When the fiscal year began early last summer the Atlantic Region, which extends from the oceanfront to Emporia and the North Carolina border to the south banks of the James River, there were 725 members. Since then, an additional 550 new members have joined, he said.

"No region in Virginia has grown more drastically" than the Atlantic Region, which is ranked as one of the top five regions in the nation, Anninos said.

Centurion uses "Continuous Flow" cleaning technique

Centurion Cleaning offers quality cleaning of carpets and upholstery. But unlike traditional methods of cleaning, such as steam or dry foam, Centurion uses a "Continuous Flow" technique. This allows much more dirt and water to be removed from the carpets, according to owner Thomas Graves, and ensures a shorter drying time.

Centurion Cleaning is located at 105 North Plaza Trail, suite 152. You can call Centurion at 498-1342 for service 24 hours a day.

Graves has been in Virginia Beach six months, moving here from St. Paul. "I like it here," he said. "It's a nice city; and a lot of development. That's what we came here for to begin with."

Program would improve 7 of 12 target neighborhoods in 3 years

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

The Community Development Department has recommended a program which would complete improvements in seven of the city's 12 target areas within three years. Five target areas already have been completed.

Maryann Ustick, Community Development director, told Council at a work session Monday that implementing the recommendations would cost the city $2.31 million in addition to the Community Development funds which already have been allocated to the projects.

Ustick proposed that a combination of Community Development Block Grant funds for the 14th, 15th and 16th program years and a significant contribution from the general fund be used to accomplish the task.

She said that the contribution from the general fund would restore Community Development funds that were spent on more general uses such as the improvement of Norfolk Avenue and Pleasure House Road and the construction of Seatack Fire Station.

Priority in the program has been given to basic infrastructure—water, sewer, streets and drainage.

When the infrastructure work is completed, she said, the city can focus its resources on housing, not only in the target neighborhoods but in other neighborhoods throughout the city.

The target neighborhoods where the infrastructure improvements have been completed are Doyletown, Lake Smith, Newlight, Beechwood and Mill Dam.

Ustick said that each neighborhood was considered individually with recommendations based on its unique character.

Mayor Jones set to restore his credibility

By Valerie Olander
Staff Writer

"If I let my emotions control, I'd be in court tomorrow," said Mayor Robert G. Jones after his decision not to run for the mayor's seat. He had already resigned his council seat.

Jones, a lawyer, accused the Norfolk newspapers of bullying him out of seeking a second term as mayor.

The controversy began in 1986 but came to a head on Feb. 20, when a Virginian-Pilot article headlined, "Jones sought to swap clout for job, letter says" appeared prominently on its front page.

The article reported that a con-

"I wish I had the resources to serve," Jones said. "In light of The Virginian-Pilot's attack on my integrity, it has been difficult with supporters."

fidential letter, of which the newspapers apparently have a copy, in the state attorney general's office stated that his support for a new courts complex hinged on their appointment of him to a lucrative court job.

It was also reported in the article that the confidential letter was sent to Jones' lawyer, Stanley E. Sack and was written on behalf of five judges who believed they might have to testify in a libel suit that Jones filed last year.

Sacks has accused the papers of going to extraordinary lengths to write a story about Jones and

Commentary

On one side of the scoreboard, there's the newspapers. On the other side there's the mayor.

The mayor has said The Virginian-Pilot and The Ledger-Star have:

- "Attacked" him.
- "Abused" him.
- "Outraged" him.
- "Blatantly disregarded the truth" about him.
- "Deliberately printed falsehoods" about him.
- Been "arrogant" to him.
- Been "horrendous" in dealing with him.
- Denied him the right to confront his accusers.
- "Impugned" his "integrity."
- A "Vendetta" against him.
- Tried to prove him guilty while he's still technically innocent.
- Written "lies" about him.

The newspapers, however, stand squarely behind:

- The First Amendment.
- The Freedom of the Press.
- An allegedly incriminating letter.

The fact that they are innocent of his charges unless he can prove him guilty.

The integrity of their institution and of their reporters.

And the fact that if they are proven wrong they have a lot more than their name and reputation on the line, there's also a possible $6.6 million to lose.

Of course, the mayor might argue that his fragmentary quotes were taken out of context. But how can that be when the verbiage used does not allow much room for interpretation when the issue and questions are about a potential multi-million dollar libel suit that may be lodged against the newspapers by Virginia Beach Mayor Robert G. Jones?

Obviously, Jones is setting the state, testing the waters. He is outlining his offense and trying to muster public support against a giant — a giant whose industry already suffers sometimes from an unfair credibility problem. The mayor is practicing damage control in front of a spotlight which is damaging his professional and financial security and future. But the light is likely to be burning bright and hot because of the manpower and resources available to the newspapers.

"I need to make a living" the mayor told The Virginian Beach Sun late last Friday afternoon, following that morning's public disclosure that he would not run in an historic mayoral race.

Jones said he's not trying to build a political powerbase of residents who are critical of the local press. He said he's not "politically astute enough" to manipulate anybody or any series of events. He said this whole episode "may be personal" but that he "doesn't go out of his way to offend people."

He said the letter in question "must be understood in context." He said he is "entitled" to know how the newspapers received a copy of a letter mailed to his attorney. He said he'll "place the reporters under oath" to determine why they wrote what they wrote and why it was published. He said the letter must have been "leaked." The timing of the leak, he said, could have

Jones case may be 'futile' against 'giant'

McClanan says
By Greg Goldfarb
Managing Editor

Veteran City Councilwoman Reba McClanan, who recently decided not to run for mayor, said that Mayor Robert Jones is possibly "embarking on a futile project" in his potential libel suit against The Virginian-Pilot and The Ledger-Star.

McClanan, who represents the Princess Anne Borough and is the wife of Delegate Glenn McClanan, a lawyer, said the mayor might have a fighting chance against the newspapers if "he has the time and money to devote to it." She said she "didn't quite follow at all" how the whole situation unfolded.

"It's hard to say what evidence there is," she said.

McClanan said that if she were in Jones' place, "I'd want to know" how a copy of Jones' attorney's letter wound up in The Pilot's newsroom.

She said Jones "indicated" to her several days before he made his public announcement that he was considering not running for mayor. She said that had she known before she pulled out of the race, and decided to keep her council seat, that Jones wasn't running, she would have run. Running

Ricketts: Tourism a year-round job

By Valerie Olander
Staff Writer

The beach is about to become invaded. The roads are about to become even more congested than they already are. Parking spaces at the oceanfront will be few and far between. In other words, the tourist season is almost upon us.

A beach and a few resort hotels along the strip isn't completely responsible for the annual three month invasions. James B. Ricketts is partly accountable for this.

Ricketts is the man responsible for inviting and luring 2.5 million tourists to the world's largest resort city every year via public relations, media advertising and brochure development.

He is Virginia Beach's economic development coordinator. One of Ricketts' jobs is handling the advertising and promotions of the city.

Not only does tourism bring tourists to the area but it also brings 88,000 delegates attending conventions at the Pavilion and creates more than 20,000 jobs for the city.

Tourism is obviously big business and Ricketts' job is the mainstream behind it.

On a $2 million budget, he tries to entice tourists to the city. Presently, he is working closely with the State Division of Tourism to develop international tourism to Virginia Beach. By organizing airline packages, tourists from England, Germany and Japan will soon be on their way to the resort city.

"It looks good because of the dollar situation," Ricketts said. "There's a reasonable increase overseas. If the dollar sits, it will continue."

"Competition is strong for tourist dollars. The quality of the industry depends on advertising and promotion." — James B. Ricketts

"Competition is strong for tourist dollars," he said. "The quality of the industry depends on advertising and promotion. It has brought in a lot. The tax base increases revenue and keeps it healthy for the future too," he said.

"The tourist industry has a larger economic impact," he said. "Most of the money spent is by tourists; by people who don't live here."

Ricketts, 47, explained that they spend their money and in return the city doesn't have to provide public schooling for them and other services. Without tourism, the residents wouldn't have the quality of life they presently have and taxes would go up.

Promoting Virginia Beach is a year-round process. The prime season is June, July and August but programs for the summer business pick up in March until the first week in June.

Editorials

Night court is not a solution

Virginia Beach is considering a need for a night court to alleviate the overcrowding in the city's Juvenile and General District courts.

Night court has been offered as a temporary solution to ease the crowding on the court docket while plans are underway to build a $30 million judicial center at Princess Anne Courthouse.

Last year the caseload in the General District Court increased 26 percent. Since 1983, civil filings have doubled and criminal cases have risen 72 percent.

The city presently has four General District Court judges and are handling a yearly caseload of 165,000 which equals to 41,250 each. The average state caseload is 27,085 per year.

A fifth General District court judgeship is being considered by the General Assembly. In the meantime night court has been suggested to ease the crunch.

The judges, who would have to preside over the court, would have to make the decision. They have not yet taken a stand on the issue.

Night court may appeal to those who must take a day off from work to appear in court, but the city would have to come up with enough money to provide clerks, sheriff's deputies and to maintain the building for the extended hours.

Holding court in the evenings would save the courtroom from being overcrowded but it wouldn't save the judge from being overworked. Nor it is not going to reduce the number of cases that a judge has to hear. There will still only be four judges and the same number of cases on the court docket.

Night court is not going to solve the problem. It will just reorganize it. What Virginia Beach needs is a fifth judge. — V.A.O.

A home for the homeless

A coalition of three social outreach programs wants to temporarily house the homeless in the Marlin Manor Motel, a building the city was planning to level to create room for a new bridge over Rudee Inlet.

The city bought the property last year with the future plans of a second bridge in mind. The state is expected to commence construction by 1990.

In the meantime, Mothers Inc., Virginia Beach Ecumenical Housing and the Virginia Beach Christian Outreach want to turn it into a resource for the homeless.

The Samaritan Houses I, II, and III, sponsored by Ecumenical Housing, provide shelter to homeless families with children but singles and couples without children are turned away. The motel's 28 efficiency apartments would take in up to 60 people.

A brilliant idea with two large problems. The city has no insurance on the property; and the cost of preparing the property for occupation.

The group has received a few financial pledges including some state support but not enough to get the project off the ground.

The head of the board appointed to the effort, Flo Haynie, is reported to have said that they can't direct full attention to raising funds until they get city approval. The City Council is expected to make a decision next month.

If the City Council does approve the request the temporary arrangement will be the first step towards finding a permanent shelter for the homeless.

Although the homeless are in need of a shelter, the city must give its permission. Hopefully the coalition will be able to put their plans to the test but they are in need of much more financial support.

Unless enough funds are pledged to the outreach groups the project is unlikely to get an approval from the city. — V.A.O.

Minibonds are a sound investment

Soon investors will be able to buy a piece of the city highways. The city will be offering minibonds for $500 each at a seven percent interest rate. The minibonds would be worth $614 in three years.

The minibonds totaling $2 million will be available April 21 through April 29 on a first-come-first-serve basis. They are included in a $24.8 million sale that the city approved last year. Councilwoman Nancy K. Parker suggested the idea of minibonds in the fall. The proceeds from the minibonds will be part of a $12.7 million pool targeted for 10 road projects.

The city has set a $5,000 limit on the amount of bonds one person or a group can buy. A three year maturity date is set up for the bonds. Buyers can cash-in at the end of the first or second year. However, early cash-ins will result in a penalty. A $10 penalty was suggested but it is likely to increase. The city has also set a $100,000 limit to the

Letters to the Editor

Jaycees valuable to local community

Editor:

Enjoyed reading the article in last week's (The Virginia Beach Sun, March 2) issue about the formation of new Jaycee chapters and the continuation of existing Jaycee chapters in the area.

Please allow me, however, to provide additional insight as to the importance and the relationship of the Jaycees to the community.

The Virginia Beach Jaycees have had the opportunity to touch the lives of many members of this community. They have accomplished their goals with such style and class and because of their efforts they are often called upon by the Virginia Beach community to lend their support in time of need.

During the summer months they helped raise money for the Muscular Dystrophy Association, as well as participate in the Labor Day telephone held at the Pavilion Hotel. They sent 20 of our mentally and physically handicapped children to their camp in Roanoke for one week of recreation, with money donated from members of our community. They also helped start the Sugar Plum Bakery, a place that will teach handicapped people to be self-sufficient and productive members of our community.

The Virginia Beach Jaycees finished the summer by hosting the East Coast Surfing Championships for the 25th year in a row. The event, the second oldest continuously run surfing event in the world, attracted surfers from throughout the world to compete for $10,000 in prize money. The championships were the one of the biggest and best yet in attracting the interest of many national media representatives.

In the fall and winter months we saw them organize and participate in an array of projects including raising money for Kings Daughter's Children Hospital; continued support of the Vietnam MIA/POWs; the Christmas Shopping Tour for underprivileged children, in which 65 children were able to participate; and of course voter registration.

The Virginia Beach Jaycees have centered many of their projects on recognizing the people in our community who are out there trying to make a difference in Virginia Beach. Such projects as Outstanding Young Person's Recognition Night, First Citizen's Award Banquet and their Holiday at the Sea Celebration are just a few of the events they sponsor to produce goodwill between the community and their members. The community has become aware of the great things the Virginia Beach Jaycees have done and they have rallied behind them on more than a few occasions.

Throughout the year, the Virginia Beach Jaycees have been recognized for their efforts at the state level. This year, on May 13, 14 and 15, the Virginia Beach Jaycees are hosting the 1988 Virginia Jaycees State Convention.

Off the Record

It's just office decoration

Some people have great views out of their office windows. Some can look into the blue of the ocean. Others can look down from a tall highrise onto a busy city street. I, on the other hand, am socially deprived. I don't have a picturesque view, or for that matter, I don't even have a window. My desk is in limbo.

There is no need to get out the tiny violin and play a sad song for me. Limbo isn't all that bad. I am allowed the privilege of looking at a xerox machine all day. It's a little like watching the Best of Carson. I get to watch an uncooperative piece of machinery get the best of my colleagues.

If you have never seen an adult throw a temper tantrum you're missing out on the better things in life. They become red-faced, curse, kick and pound, but it just doesn't matter. No matter what they do, how hard they try, or how hard they like that machine will not do what it is directed to do. It never did and it never will — it's a disgrace to the xerox family tradition. It's just office decoration.

Since my desk is strategically placed here I get to observe the unfortunate souls who must use it from day to day.

I have never personally seen this but it's a reporter's instinct. I know what goes on in the front office when our two secretaries realize that they need to make copies.

"I'm not going to do it, you do it," the two argue back and forth like two bright-eyed children in a game of dare. Finally they use the adult method to decide who gets the pleasure — they flip a coin.

Reluctantly one of them slowly makes their way down the short corridor to . . . limbo. The Jaws theme song rings in their head, "dun, dun . . . dun, dun . . ." Then they lift the horrid lid and place the Byerly Publications secret document inside. The lid slams shut and the machine begins to sputter out of control as if it is possessed. Finally, one of the 10 copies needed spits out of the right side . . . then silence. The grand finale is an ear-piercing buzz and lights flickering.

Inside the machine in tightly clamped jaws is the remains of the other nine secret documents. The PLO (Paper Liberation Organization) is holding them hostage.

They kick, they pound, they curse and they beg but they don't realize that I could have typed those 10 copies faster than that machine is going to give them up — and I only use two fingers.

Other co-workers gather around and offer their sympathy. A few take turns on the reset button. One asks for dynamite. Another wants a sledgehammer. "It's temperamental," the boss offers trying to calm down the frantic employees, but I know the truth. It was hungry and now it's full. I heard it belch.

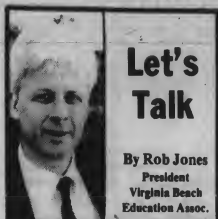

As everyone simultaneously moaned "awe," I saw the little red workman blink on the screen. It might as well have been a "R.I.P." sign blinking because someone should seriously consider putting a polyester suit on it and putting it six feet under.

As I glanced to the other side of the room, I saw our fast-fingered typesetter pecking

Let's Talk

By Rob Jones
President
Virginia Beach
Education Assoc.

You can often judge a man's ability by the jobs his boss gives him. Garland Jackson, Special Assistant to the Superintendent, has tackled some tough and controversial assignments. Mr. Jackson chairs what he calls the school system's most maligned committee, the Calendar Committee. Lee Jackson (Stonewall not Garland)—King Day and Presidents Day survived, and so did Mr. Jackson. The dust hadn't settled, and the venerable Mr. Jackson, deserving shelter from the storm, began his next non-controversial assignment — the presentation of an AIDS policy to the school board.

The proposed policy, with two minor revisions, is a good one. There is great wisdom in the school board's decision to have a policy drafted, debated, revised, and adopted before it is faced with avoidable controversy. Arcadia, Florida and Fairfax, Virginia provide clear examples of what we should strive to avoid. This policy is a wise step away from a damaging controversy that could rob our school administration and school board of valuable time and damage the reputation of our schools. We've seen this happen elsewhere

The Virginia Beach School System has acted responsibly to address the problem of AIDS. A film that was modified and shown to secondary students last year, the accompanying instruction, and an AIDS Information brochure for employees of the Virginia Beach City Public Schools were important first steps. Adoption of the proposed policy is the next step.

The proposed policy calls for the establishment of an AIDS Review Panel to consider, on a case by case basis, information pertinent to each individual student or employee. The panel would consist of "the individual staff member or a representative of the individual staff member involved, a Public Health Department representative, a physician selected by the Division Superintendent, the parent(s) or guardian(s) of a minor, a school system administrator, and the Director of Special Education when Special Education students are involved." After reviewing the information, the panel will issue a recommendation to the Division Superintendent. In the event the individual disagrees with the panel's decision, an appeal can be made to the school board.

This sensitive and intelligent policy may save our school system a great deal of money, as it may prevent costly litigation. It protects the rights of the AIDS victim and of the other students and school personnel. Mr. Jackson served us well. I urge the school board to support the AIDS and AIDS-Related Diseases policy and the accompanying administrative regulation.

The minibond sale is said to be the first in Virginia but the idea of the sale has been catching on across the country. Fort Worth, Texas, sold $1.7 million worth of minibonds in four days.

Purchases are not only limited to Virginia Beach residents. City employees and council members are allowed to buy also.

Minibonds are not only beneficial for the city to make road improvements but are also a sound investment for people who have long-term and long-range investments in mind. The idea of smaller bonds also allowed smaller investors to become shareholders who might not be able to take advantage of other bond markets. — V.A.O.

around the corner to see what the commotion was all about. I saw a devilish grin and I heard her mumble as she disappeared out of sight. "At least it's not the typesetting machine again this week."

Ricketts

By July, advertising is beginning for the late summer, which is August and in August the promotion for the fall season begins.

Tourism ads appear year-round in magazines such as Better Homes and Gardens and professional trade publications.

Ricketts, who has been tourist development coordinator for 14 years, is responsible not only for the advertising and promotion of the city but his responsibilities also include managing the Dome and the Pavilion, the Visitor Information Services and the operation of the city parking lot.

His average day is "busy, real busy," he said. He works with the tourism staff, the Pavilion staff, the private sector, the hotel and motel association, the State Division of Tourism and the advertising agency that is under the contract of the Economic Development Division.

Ricketts, who lives in the Berkshire section of the city, is from a service family. He was born in Honolulu, Hawaii but in the course of growing up he lived in California, Northern Virginia and in Norfolk.

He attended Luther College in Iowa graduating in 1963 with a degree in physical education. He intended to be a coach but instead went to officer candidate school in Newport, R.I. in 1964.

For five of the eight years that he was a Naval officer he was stationed in Norfolk. During Ricketts' last three years in the service he was stationed in Atsugi, Japan. He was a supply core officer handling air station financial matters.

In 1972, after he got out of the service he received a job as the Norfolk Port Industry Authority. He was in charge of Norfolk International Airport helping passengers aboard luxury line cruises. He was in charge of the public relations and promoted cruises out of Norfolk.

He held that position for two years before being hired by Virginia Beach as the tourist development coordinator. At that time he was in charge of tourist promotion, convention and sales at the old Convention Center at 19th Street and Pacific Ave.

In 1976, the city made the decision to build a new convention center. Ricketts was managing the old facility and at the same time was coordinating the new building and getting the Pavilion furnished.

In 1983, the Tourist Division took over the Visitor Information Services because the feeling was that the tourism industry had grown so big, so fast that the city should do the promoting instead of the private sector.

Ricketts is expecting a "good tourist season. "We have so much going for us."

Ricketts gave examples of the landscaping on the boardwalk, the recent city ordinance to remove gaudy signs hanging over merchant shops at the beach and the long range project set for Atlantic Avenue is starting to come together.

"The oceanfront is more modern looking," he said, stressing good quality images and the major new tourist attractions along with the diversity of things to see such as; the Marine Science Museum; the Maritime Museum; the new Art Center is nearing completion; a new Visitor Information Center is scheduled to be constructed across from the Pavilion and the Wild Water Rapids.

"It's very positive the visitors are responding," Ricketts said. "The future looks bright."

tion at the Pavilion Convention Center. Over 1,500 Jaycee will gather in Virginia Beach for a weekend of celebration. Year-end awards will be given out at that time and the Virginia Beach Jaycee Chapter has a very strong chance of taking the number one chapter in the state. You can be proud that the efforts they are putting into our community are being recognized as the best in the state out of 200 chapters in Virginia.

In June, the National Convention will be held in Richmond at which time Virginia has a chance of being the number one Virginia Jaycee Organization in the United States. The recognition that is about to be bestowed upon our community is not one to be taken lightly.

The Virginia Beach Jaycees is a young persons leadership organization for individuals 21-39 years of age. They presently have over 300 members and want to encourage as many young people of this community to get involved. The more people they have the more they will be able to accomplish for the Virginia Beach community. If you think they have done some great things so far, just wait and see what is still to come.

If anyone is interested in finding out more about the Virginia Beach Jaycees, come out to one of their meetings held the second and fourth Tuesday of every month. Their meeting house is located in the Holland Commerce at 468 S. Independence Blvd. Suite A-104. Become a part of the best young people's leadership training organization in Virginia Beach.

Section of Back Bay closed

Refuge Manager Anthony D. Leger recently announced that a portion of Back Bay National Wildlife (NWR) will again be closed to the public for protection of shorebirds through October 31.

The closure, which is part of an effort to provide undisturbed feeding and resting habitat for many species of shorebirds, including the threatened piping plover, was initiated in 1985. The increased protection provided by previous closure periods resulted in greater numbers of shorebirds using the beach.

The northernmost one mile of beach from Little Island City Park, to the Refuge's vehicular access ramp, will be closed to all uses. A designated area on the outside of the closed zone, will be left open for through foot traffic.

The seaside and dune trails provide access to the beach and create a one-mile hiking loop. Both trails fall within the remaining three miles of beach which are open to wildlife-oriented activities such as hiking, nature photography, wildlife observation, and surf fishing. Swimming, sunbathing, surfing and other non-wildlife-oriented activities are not permitted on the Refuge.

Individuals wishing to engage in these types of activities may do so at Little Island City Park, adjacent to the Refuge. Refuge parking will only be available for visitors engaged in wildlife-oriented activities.

teristics. She said that the thrust of the Community Development program is to benefit the existing residents, to preserve the neighborhood and to establish land use patterns.

She said that the staff wants to avoid improvements which encourage land speculation.

She then listed the seven projects, the completed work and recommendations as follows:

Atlantick Park-The community has water and sewer. No additional capital improvements are recommended, she said, because the neighborhood is in noise zone three or accident potential zone B under the Navy's AICUZ (Air Installation Compatible Use Zone) study. She said that the city is not permitted to use Department of Housing and Urban Development funds in high noise zones.

Burton Station-Already designed water and sewer improvements have been placed on hold pending the completion of the master plan of the Norfolk International Airport which is expected at the end of the year. Part of the property is in the crash zone and this may be acquired by the Airport and part is in the high noise zone.

Gracetown-Water and sewer was completed in 1980. A drainage program under way is expected to be completed this spring. Recommended is an underground (piped) ditch system.

Standard streets and curb and gutter are not recommended because the streets are extremely narrow (18 feet wide) and wider streets would impact the houses. She said that all the lots are subdivided (108 are vacant) and can be improved now without curb and gutter.

Newtown Farm-Water and sewer are going in now. Plans for street improvement and drainage will be completed in June with construction scheduled for the fall. Ustick said that because the borrow pit where the community would naturally drain has reached its capacity, the drainage will have to be carried along Newtown Road, a more expensive proposition. She said the cost is high in relation to the number of houses there. She said that the city needs to encourage moderate income single-family houses there because it's an ideal place for them. The community is zoned R-6 residential. She said that most of the property is not subdivided so that standard improvements would be required.

Queen City-Water and sewer is coming and streets will be widened with basic improvements starting in the fall. Utilization of the natural drainage pattern is recommended because the construction of standard streets would demolish most of the houses. The houses are close together, she said, with one-third of the community in Chesapeake. Chesapeake will make the same improvements on its side that Virginia Beach makes on this side.

Reedtown-Water and sewer and drainage will be completed this spring. No other improvements are contemplated because the community is low density with a high unit cost. She said the cost of the improvements now is $74,000 per unit. The community has lacked public services such as garbage, mail and street lighting, but that these problems are being taken care of.

Seatack-This community has a mixed status. Water and sewer has been installed, boundary lines have been changed to get rid of commercial and industrial zones and areas like Salt Marsh Point which was once included in the neighborhood. The city has plans for open drainage systems, but no street improvements are planned for the two (of three) remaining phases. Recommended is underground drainage with no curb and gutter. Ustick also said that Birdneck Road should be widened simultaneously. She said that the neighborhood is in noise zone three, and putting in curb and gutter would encourage more residents. The aim is for the preservation and revitalization for the people who live there.

Councilwoman Reba McClanahan expressed annoyance that projects were allowed to be built in the area, using up the drainage. She suggested that the city look into the situation to determine if this was done knowingly.

McClanahan also added that a pumping station in Seatack was built with Community Development funds.

"The good news is that five are completed," said Councilwoman Barbara Henley. The recommendation to use general fund money for the neighborhoods, Henley said, is like a proposal she made a few years ago and was not approved.

City Manager Aubrey V. Watts Jr. said that she wanted instructions from Council on how to proceed with the engineering in relation to the drainage systems.

McClanahan said the city has many more neighborhoods with open drainage. She said she wanted to know the effect closed ditches in the target neighborhoods would have on other neighborhoods which have open ditches.

"People will say, 'why not me?'" said Councilman John D. Moss. He said that it was necessary for the city to establish the criteria and say it would be applied everywhere.

been political. He said he doesn't know the newspapers' motivation for this episode and that he "was taken by surprise" by all of it.

He said he doesn't need all this harassment and that he was "backed into" his city council seat seven years ago to begin with. He said although he has tried twice for state office and failed that it is "out of his league" to analyze this situation politically.

What will happen now, if the mayor has the fortitude to push his challenge, is that he will try to force the newspapers to show their hand in court, vis a vis, their sources, their reporters and their notes, and the letter.

And the newspaper had better have a good hand to show or else risk losing $6.6 million and being humiliated throughout the region and the state. And the mayor could be the hero for taking them to court and calling their bluff.

If the mayor loses he won't lose nearly as much as the newspapers (in money) but he will have lost his reputation, which of course is more priceless. If the newspapers lose, on the other hand, not only will they have lost their reputation and integrity, but also millions. And are the newspapers running the risk of supervising and name and all that money worth, as Jones implies, then trying to get someone other than him in the mayor's seat? It's unlikely. It seems that Jones is realistic enough to know how to best earn a living and human enough to go through any length to find out how a "confidential" letter got into the newspapers' hands.

And are the newspapers running the risk of jeopardizing their name and all that money worth, as Jones implies, then trying to get someone other than him in the mayor's seat? It's unlikely.

If the matter goes to court the result will rest on whichever side does the best job of interpreting the contents of the controversial letter.

James C. Raper, managing editor of The Virginian-Pilot and The Ledger-Star said his newspapers stand behind their stories and their reporters.

"Oh yes," he said. "We believe in the articles we publish." He also added that Mayor Jones has had "ample" time and space in the newspapers to air his views.

Music in Motion Dance Company will present "Of Art and Artists"

Music in Motion Dance Company of Virginia Beach will present "Of Art and Artists" on Saturday, March 12 at 7:30 p.m. at the Virginia Beach Pavilion.

The performance will be in three acts.

The first act will be "An Afro-American Suite" with choreography by Judith Hatcher. This piece was commissioned by the Virginia Beach City Public School system in honor of Black American Week.

The musical selections are by black composers, and the choreography presents the contributions of black and ethnic dance to the dance world today. Other pieces in Act One include choreography by Cynthia Tamato Free; a solo by Susan Bankowski, a student at VCU; and a jazz piece choreographed by Darlene Kelly, with original music by Ray Muth and Ralph Copley, local musicians.

Act Two will display the talents of guest artists "The Carolina Dancers", from Chapel Hill, N.C. This is a company of dancers trained in classical ballet with experience in such companies and schools as Joffrey, Elliot Felo, School of American Ballet, and the North Carolina School of the Arts. Their choreography includes jazz and modern.

"For Vincent" will be presented in Act Three, it's an original ballet by Judith Hatcher, first presented in 1979. The piece will express the brilliance of Van Gogh's paintings through dance.

Also in Act Three will be "The Artist and his Muse", using the technique of liquid light, the artist will appear to paint the backdrop.

Kell Breslin, 16, is the son of Joe and Sandy Breslin.

Both performances are free and open to the public, but reservations should be made at the switchboard.

The Amadeus Trio features Pamela Frame, cellist; James Barbagallo, pianist; and Timothy Baker, violinist. The Amadeus Trio is replacing the Leonore Trio originally scheduled for these dates.

Reviewed with lavish praise in The New York Times, Tasf (Moscow) and the San Francisco Chronicle, these three exciting virtuosos have performed in Europe, Canada, Russia and the Far East, as well as all over the U.S. They have played under the baton of Rostropovich, Commissiona, Tilson-Thomas, Fiedler and Silverstein with the Moscow Philharmonic, the National Symphony, San Francisco Symphony, and Singapore Philharmonic.

Based in New York City, the trio appears under the auspices of American Artists Management, Inc.

The Amadeus Trio feature pianist James Barbagallo, violinist Timothy Baker and cellist Pamela Frame.

Pamela Frame has appeared at Virginia Wesleyan College as soloist on two previous occasions, and James Barbagallo was featured as pianist with the Virginia Beach Pops last year.

Their formal program on the evening of March 9 will include Haydn's Trio in C Major, Hob. XV, 27; Ravel's Trio for Piano, Violin and Violoncello; and Brahms' Trio No. 2 in C Major, Opus 87. The Thursday morning informal program will include excerpts from the Wednesday concert and additional material.

The 19th annual Women of Wesleyan Flea Market will be held in Virginia Wesleyan College's Cunningham Gymnasium from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Saturday, March 12. Admission is 50 cents per person.

All booths have already been filled, so there will be an abundant supply on display for shoppers.

With Easter on April 3, some booths will feature homemade chocolate-covered eggs (all flavors) which can be personalized with names. Other specialties to be sold include quilted pillows, grape-vine wreaths, handcrafted and vintage jewelry, woodcrafts, shell items, soft-sculptured dolls and stuffed animals.

There will be the usual flea market offerings of children's clothing, toys, collectibles, antiques, silver and porcelain.

The Women of Wesleyan will also be selling baked goods and "white elephants."

Proceeds from space rentals and admission fees will go towards projects sponsored by the Women of Wesleyan for the College.

Women of Wesleyan is a volunteer support organization of Virginia Wesleyan College. The group has raised almost $70,000 for the College. The funds have been used for library books, picnic tables, a piano, a College greenhouse, new furniture for student lounges, other equipment, and for scholarships.

Princess Anne gymnasts close season 12-0; season not over for gymnastic addicts

By Jackie Matthews
Special To The Sun

Gymnastics season is over only for a few.

The high school season recently came to a close, but girls like Sierra Calloway, Beach District champion, Christina Totossy, Shari Hulin, Nikki Dillard, Beth Frigge, Amy O'Conner and Angie McDonald of Green Run; Erin Berry, Kristin Brenner, and Kelly Laun of Kempville; Terri Beale of First Colonial; Andrea Roberts and Mary Matthews of Princess Anne train all year at Ocean Tumblers gymnastics.

"There are very few backyard gymnasts," said Ray Shackelford, coach at Ocean Tumblers (OT).

The girls that take the top awards compete regularly in USGF meets all over the East Coast. Recently gymnasts from OT competed in Bermuda and Japan bringing home many awards.

Katie Anderson, coach at Princess Anne High School keeps in touch with OT coaches, Shackelford and Chris Beaver. "I competed at P.A. when I attended here and I think it is important for the coaches to work together," she said.

It was predicted that Princess Anne (P.A.) would come in third place this year behind Kempville and Green Run. "The girls were under a lot of pressure, but they found they could win and they liked the feeling," said Anderson.

Matthews, a junior is the only returning gymnast who joined the team last year, when P.A. came from their usual seventh place of fifth. Andrea Roberts, Kelly Shanley, Edna and Kellie Pollock, Kim and Kelly McElheny, Kristin Wagner, Carla McCraw and Chrissa Sexton joined this season to give P.A. the first place spot with a 12-0 record.

"Some don't realize that even though gymnastics is an individual sport it takes three top scores to win a meet. Some schools had outstanding individual gymnasts but they needed back up scores to win," Anderson said.

Anderson tries to compete all her gymnasts whenever possible. "You need to look to years ahead and I believe the exposure in competition and to the judges is important."

Andrea Roberts, Edna Pollock and Mary Matthews compete all around. Andrea and Edna are strong gymnasts and can score "nines". Mary is consant with high "eights" and Kelly Shanley was always there to slip in that extra beam or vault score to give P.A. the winning mark.

The P.A. Team had an extra special touch this year with McElheny, father of twin gymnasts Kim and Kelly. McElheny not only assisted the coach with the equipment each meet but gave the girls that TLC they needed when they wore down.

P.A. has waited a long time for a winning season in gymnastics and are very proud of this past year. You can find Anderson, nick named "Ms. Woody" from the gymnasts, on the P.A. track field coaching the track team and hoping for an additional winning season.

Malibu celebrates 25th anniversary 300 join in celebration

By Jackie Matthews
Special To The Sun

John Prine, principal and Perry Williams, assistant principal joined with approximately 300 at Malibu Elementary School to celebrate the school's 25th anniversary. Teachers, students and friends of past and present filled the building viewing old snapshots, news clippings and scrapbook memories. Some previous students came carrying their own children. All eagerly seeking that special teacher they remembered.

In 1983, the Virginia Beach Sun printed an article on the "Wizard of Oz," a play performed at Malibu. It was the largest production the school had ever done. Many of the cast returned looking for Mary Daniels and Diane Faircloth, previous teachers who directed the play. Articles and pictures brought back fond memories of the time. A reunion is now planned at the home of Pat Alley, a sixth grade teacher, to view the video he took of the musical.

Another celebrity was a previous P.E. teacher, David Seymour. Elementary schools used to meet each year at Cox High School to compete in sports events. Malibu students had won individually but Seymour wanted Malibu school to come in first place. This was a well remembered occasion since Seymour started spiriting up the students in September for the spring meet. In the spring of 1976, Seymour led the school to first place.

Malibu began in 1962 with afternoon classes at Plaza Junior High. They did not move into the Malibu building until after the first of the year in 1963. Ruth Bridges was the first principal. Since that time Malibu has expanded adding new classrooms, equipment, computer programs, pre-school and tiny tot classes, a chapter one program and specialists to meet any child's needs. Special days of the year are set aside to encourage the children in reading, art and spirit.

The SCA is led by Mrs. Lenore Goodchild, a second grade teacher, who reinforces school spirit with T-shirts, socks, and Malibu buttons. The students are also encouraged to participate in community events by their principal. Malibu is present each year in the Neptune Festival and Sand Castle Classic.

Special guests attending the celebration included School Superintendent Dr. James Melvin, Mr. Bruce McGuire, Mr. Jerry Deviney, Mr. Jim Payne, Mrs. Anna Margaret Rhodes, Mrs. Rhonda Skaggs and many former teachers and PTA presidents.

Diana Hicks, Ann Sawyer and Sandy Alley as well as many others worked for months researching, phoning and planning and all the work reaped a big 25th anniversary success.

The Back Page

Jones

questions how the newspapers got into his mail and got a copy of the letter.

The unfavorable publicity and many other factors added to Jones' decision not to seek a second term as mayor.

"Basically it's not a career, financially," he said, adding that there are large demands of "energy and time commitment that the mayor's job requires."

Money has also been a concern, Jones has stated in the past that it could possibly take up to $200,000 to run a "credible" campaign for mayor.

"I wish I had the resources to serve," Jones said. "In light of "the Virginian-Pilot's attack on my integrity, it has been difficult with supporters."

"My campaign was an expensive one; it was complex. It was not a slogan and fancy adverbs," he continued. "I had a comprehensive agenda not on simple issues."

Jones said that he is not bitter with the unfavorable publicity that he received from the Norfolk newspapers but rather feels "a sense of outrage that an institution that has a monopoly on the first amendment can so blatantly disregard the truth and print falsehoods."

"The Norfolk newspapers are so arrogant they don't believe they have to apologize to anyone no matter how horrendous,"
Jones said.

"I'm not vindictive. I want to reestablish my credibility. I never dishonored myself or my integrity," he said.

The ongoing battle began in October 1986, three months after Jones became mayor. Jones applied to the Circuit Court judges for the commissioner of accounts job. At the same time, he was chairman of the City Council committee studying the construction of a new $30 million judicial complex, which is now being designed by the city.

The newspapers reported that his support for the new court complex depended on their appointment of him to the commissioner of accounts job.

Jones filed a $6.6 million libel suit against the newspapers. In January, Jones filed a non-suit in the case but has until October to bring it back up.

Jones said that there is a "strong possibility" that he will refile the suit. "I talked with all the attorneys on all the ramifications."

A Virginian-Pilot editorial that appeared on Feb. 27 caused Jones to write a Letter to the Editor asking the paper to reveal their sources and in turn he would ask his attorney to release the letter. He also asked the paper to retract the article, apologize to him publicly and declare him innocent until proven guilty.

"I think if they were fair (they would reveal the source of the letter), Jones said. "The letter leaked in the attorney general's office. Who else had a copy? Is it some motive to get Bob Jones? If someone is out there with a conspiracy, I am entitled to know.
There is a lot more going on behind the scenes."

"The Norfolk newspapers are so arrogant they don't believe they have to apologize to anyone no matter how horrendous,"
Jones said.

In a mass mailing, Jones had also sought advice from 1,700 supporters. He had said that if 20 to 25 percent of the cards were not returned he would seriously recess what his support base is.

Over 300 cards were returned to Jones, which equals to almost 20 percent. Jones said that it was encouraging that when they called supporters back after the article appeared in the Norfolk newspapers that "no one indicated their support was any less." Although he said that people that did not know him personally were "negative."

Jones' seven-year political career has come to a halt. His term on the City Council will expire June 30.

Jones entered politics in 1981.
He ran for the state House of Delegates and came in sixth of 11. The top five finishers won seats. Jones lost by only 345 votes.

In 1982, Jones ran for the City Council winning an at-large seat.
He finished second in a nine-candidate field. The top two candidates won seats.

The same year, he was a vice mayor candidate but the city Council chose another.

In 1983, Jones made an attempt for the state Senate seat but lost against incumbent A. Joe Canada Jr.

He ran for re-election to the City Council in 1986. He finished second in an eight-candidate field. Seats were given to the top two candidates.

Two months later, Meyera
Oberndorf and Reba McClanan split 5-5 with the Council to become mayor. Jones remained neutral. Oberndorf's followers then threw their support to Jones rather than be shut out. He then became mayor with a 6-5 vote.

Jones future plans are to return to his law practice. He wasn't certain about his future of re-entering politics or possibly seeking a higher office.

"I haven't thought much beyond this decision," he said.
"I felt the mayorship was a high office. I'm satisfied that I have done a good job and gained respect. I leave with a great deal of satisfaction."

"I brought about a sense of unity. We (the City Council) worked together on roads, water, schools . . .," he continued.
"The council grew in respect of the public confidence and trust, and with that we addressed a wide range of issues."

Now that Jones is out of the race, for Virginia Beach's first directly elected mayor, there are three candidates for the seat, Vice Mayor Meyera Oberndorf, past mayor J. Henry McCoy, and salesman Louis M. Pace.

"I would think Mrs. Ober-ndorf (is the strongest candidate)," Jones said.

Pungo Strawberry Festival beginning to blossom in May

By Stuart Cake

Special to the Virginia Beach Sun

What does Earlgrow, Premier, Redchief, Fairfax, Pocahontas, Big Red and Ever Red, among others, have in common?

These are just some of the varieties of strawberries you can come taste, see and enjoy at the Fifth Annual Pungo Strawberry Festival scheduled for Saturday and Sunday, May 28 and 29.

As an official part of the 25th Anniversary Celebration for the City of Virginia Beach, this festival celebrates one of the city's largest cash crops.

Put together by the people who call Pungo home, this festival last year had over 160,000 people in attendance with plans being made to follow the same formula as in 1987, by keeping the festival along the same lines for 1988. This means there will be plenty of home cooking, homemade crafts, live entertainment, games and a parade to keep the home town county fair atmosphere alive so everyone can have a good time.

The festival will be located in the southern end of Virginia Beach, with the center of activities once again being centered around the Pungo Shopping Center area. To arrive at the festival area, located on Princess Anne Road, you can use Indian River Road, General Booth Boulevard or Princess Anne Road from the Virginia Beach Municipal Center complex.

It is also only 10 minutes from the resort area of Virginia Beach past Rudee Inlet.

Besides the festival itself, over 150 acres in Virginia Beach are used for growing the delicious strawberry with most fields open for picking by the public, and of course several other vegetables can also be picked fresh from the fields in Virginia Beach and the surrounding areas at this time too.

In fact, last year's festival, over 8,650 quarts of strawberries were used alone and nearly 2,100 fresh strawberry pies. But the Man wants kennels in P.A.

By Lee Cahill

City Council Reporter

He's the Pungo resident who built his house smack dab in the center of the proposed realignment of Princess Anne Road.

He complained to City Council and after lengthy negotiations, the city moved the alignment just enough so that his house would be out of the proposed right-of-way, about 20 feet away.

Davidson was back in the Council Chambers Monday with an application for a use permit for dog kennels, horse stables for boarding of horses and dogs and a storage shed on the east side of Princess Anne Road, south of Pungo Ferry Road.

He wants to put the buildings in the path of the realigned realignment.

He told Council that he could not agree to one condition of the use permit recommended by the Planning Commission — that all the new structures must meet all applicable building set backs from both the existing and proposed rights-of-way.

Pungo Borough Councilwoman Barbara Henley said she would make a motion for approval if Davidson would agree to applicable setbacks from the proposed right-of-way.

Davidson said, no, he couldn't do that, and the application was denied by a vote of 10-1 with Councilman John L. Perry dissenting.

Said Councilman John A. Baum, "If we don't have that kind of condition we will have to buy up the barn and the kennels." He also pointed out that Davidson would not be giving the city the right-of-way, but only reserving it for the city to purchase.

Henley added that at the time the city acquires the property, it will pay for damages.

The road will split Davidson's site into two separate parcels and all proposed structures will need to meet the setback requirements for the agricultural districts. No date has been set for the commencement of construction of the relocated road. Planning Director Robert Scott did say that he and City Engineer Donald Trueblood had decided on the center line of the realigned road so that setbacks could be determined

PWC Norfolk Engineer of the Year: "It's one won by the branch," — Landon

By Valerie Olander

Only a few weeks ago, William P. Landon Jr. was selected as the Navy Public Works Center (PWC) Norfolk Engineer of the Year for 1988.

The award expresses the important contributions made to the PWC and its customers due to the knowledge and professional experience earned and applied by Landon.

A management group within the engineering department made the selection, which chooses between the various engineering branches such as civil, electrical, mechanical, utilities, transportation, maintenance, material inspection, planning and work control.

"I feel it's an accomplishment of the civil engineering branch. I feel good about that. It's a group effort," Landon said.

Landon joined the PWC civil and structural engineering division in 1986. The way Landon spoke of his job he gives a feeling that he enjoys getting up and going to work.

His day begins at 7:30 a.m. Landon provides his professional expertise for the in-house design and consults with private contractors on the design of civil and structural engineering work for the Naval base.

He is in charge of various ongoing projects ranging from storm drainage to waterfront facilities. His responsibilities are, assisting with the design and repair of the facilities at the base including building roads, utilities, piers, cranes and other foundations.

Landon's career began in 1964 at Newport News Shipbuilding while he was a student at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University. He started as a draftsman and became a junior designer working on summer vacations.

After graduating with a bachelor of science in civil engineering in 1966 he began full-time with the firm as a senior designer.

He began active duty with the U. S. Army in 1967 and returned to Newport News in 1969. He was a senior maintenance engineer from 1972 until 1974.

In order to advance professionally and move closer to Virginia Beach he joined Langley McDonald and Overman. He became involved in designing some area landmarks.

In Williamsburg, where Landon was raised, he designed an eight-mile winding roadway with five bridges that leads to the historic Carter's Grove Plantation. He has also contributed to Virginia Beach, where he has

City Council's dedication

Not only does City Council have to deal with long, tiring marathon Monday meetings which can last until 2 a.m., but in order to prepare for the marathon session the council members are in for a long weekend of reading and researching material that is scheduled for that day.

The city staff works similar to storks. They deliver a package to the doorsteps of the council members on Thursday evenings. The thick package may not be as cute as what the stork brings but it is guaranteed to keep the council members up until all hours of the morning.

Councilman John Moss has accused the city staff of not allowing the council enough time to research long and complex issues. It is also only an educated guess that the material is dry and difficult to digest.

After the council crams this information into their brains, similar to a student studying for mid terms, they are allowed to swirl the information around the council chambers until all hours of the morning so that each member can air their views and completely understand the issue before voting on it.

Now that the council elections are coming up and petitions have been filed it's a wonder that so many people have signed up for a job that is full-time and pays only part-time. Some candidates are even willing to spend quite a bit of money to become a member of the Virginia Beach City Council.

It's not a job with a lot of fringe benefits but someone has to do it — someone with a lot of energy, spare time and much needed dedication. — V.A.O.

Training leaders for region

The Hampton Roads Chamber of Commerce (HRCC) has initiated a new program which is intended to train emerging business leaders in its five-city region to work together for the betterment of South Hampton Roads.

The emphasis of "Leadership Hampton Roads" will be on mutual understanding of regional social and economic issues. The outcome may be decision-making on the basis of regional benefits.

This could have a positive impact on the business climate of the region as it competes nationally for industry and other development opportunities. It could also help city governments, such as Virginia Beach, Chesapeake and Portsmouth's, work together on such problems as water shortages and economic development.

The results of a close working relationship and shared leadership resources could ultimately benefit local economies, as well. Economic health regionally will mean more employment opportunities. Stimulated competition will provide citizens a better range of services from which to choose.

Each year, about 40 women and men will be selected to participate in "Leadership Hampton Roads," which will cover such topics as government, economic development, health care and military. Equal representation of each city should provide a better understanding of a city's unique assets and problems that should not be overlooked.

The cities that make up South Hampton Road have characteristics that make them individually attractive. Put them all together and there is no place like South Hampton Roads.

Hopefully, throughout this leadership training, the economic well-being of the individual cities doesn't take second priority to the region's health in the mind's of our future leaders. — H.K.

Messiness breed errors

By Valerie Olander

Confucius say messiness breeds errors. Refrigerator say cheese breeds penicillin.

Anyway you look at it, messiness is in the eye of the beholder. Some people would have tossed the cheese in the garbage years ago. Others would keep it for sentimental and scientific reasons.

Some people wouldn't be able to find anything if it was where it was suppose to be. No one condones an absolute eyesore but I think messes should be organized in individual messy piles.

I honestly believe that a messy desk is the sign of a sane mind. Some people say that everything has its place. If everything had a place how would you find it? It would be ludicrous to spend all sorts of time organizing a place for things.

What does a clean-desk-person do all day anyway? Clean their desk? Who knows? I sure don't know. Just think of all the time a person wastes cleaning their desk on company time when they could be working.

My desk happens to look lived in. I admit it would be nice to get to the bottom of these piles but after all then I would have a clean desk and nothing to do. What fun is a clean desk?

I believe that if the Clean Community Commission peeked into your desk drawer and became outraged, then you would know that you are doing a good job.

Handwriting is another example of being messy. Doctors happen to have messy handwriting. One of the required courses in Med School is Messy Handwriting 101. Who is to say that their handwriting is messy? The pharmacists can read it, can't they?

Some people have handwriting that not only resembles chicken scratch but they also have a habit of scratching something out until a little hole has developed in the paper. Most small children are culprits of this minor crime.

They abuse a pencil eraser until it is worn to the metal. They also haven't had enough education to realize that ink erasers don't work. What small children end up with is a homework assignment with little eraser holes. Most teachers look down upon papers that are turned in that look like swiss cheese. But how can they complain? At least they tried.

One mess that a reporter is always guilty of is becoming very distraught and ripping a piece of typing paper out of the typewriter, crumpling it up into the tightest ball that they possibly can and attempting to toss it into the garbage can — usually it misses.

After doing this several hundred times, they realize that the first copy was the best. Then they have to totally degrade any self-worth and go through the garbage can similar to filling through a metal cabinet, but if it's a matter of importance what else can they do?

While they are going through the mess they can find out many interesting things about other peoples' messes. They can find out what people had for lunch or how many cigarettes they smoked that particular day. It can become a rather disgusting job.

Finally after uncrumpling nearly one hundred pieces of paper they come across the one they wanted. Then they have the task of smoothing it out until it is readable. Hopefully the ketchup and mustard stains aren't too noticeable. After totally degrading themselves they realize that the copy wasn't as great as what they thought.

Then of course there is always the mess of putting everything back into the garbage can.

I guess messiness could cause errors but it depends on your definition of what a mess is.

Household safety tips

By Martin Grube
Master Fire Fighter

Would you know how to react if a pan of grease caught fire on the stove? What would be the first thing you would do? Please read these safety tips, cut them out, place them on your refrigerator and refer to them periodically.

Most grease fires occur as a result of cooking french fries in a pan full of shortening. Most people don't realize how dangerous hot grease is. All one has to do to extinguish a pan of grease on fire is to simply smother it. Use a plan lid and place the lid over the flames and the fire will go out. Flames need oxygen to keep burning and if you smother the flames with the lid, the fire will go out.

You should never allow children in the kitchen when the stove or oven is on. Always keep the pot handles turned to the side so your arms don't knock the pots off the stove. Never wear loose clothing like robes or night gowns when you cook, for the same reason.

If you do have a pan fire, never pour water on the fire! Water will cause the fire to splash out of the pan and onto the top of the stove. Never carry the pan out of the house! More people are burned by doing this. What would happen if you were to fall?

Before you begin to cook with grease, place a lid the same size as the pan away from this stove. If the pan does catch fire, you can reach for the lid, and quickly smother the fire. Cut off the stove, too. If the fire is too large, call the fire department at 911 and get out of the house.

Never leave the kitchen when the stove is on! Hot grease is as volatile as gasoline when it is heated. Please be careful and concentrate in the kitchen.

At Fire Station 16 on "C" shift, we have one person who prepares our lunch and dinner for us. His name is Larry Jarvis. We call him "Cookie." He's a great cook but we don't dare let him know it; it might go to his head and he'll quit and get a job in some French restaurant up North.

It would be wise for you to invest in a small fire extinguisher just for the kitchen. These small fire extinguishers can be found on sale for around $10. Look for a 2½ pound dry powder extinguisher. Look for the ABC rating on the label. You may call the fire prevention office at 486-1234 if you have any questions on what type to buy.

Remember, grease fires are dangerous. Try to smother the fire with a lid and don't carry the pan through the house.

Drop by any fire station and ask for a free pamphlet on kitchen fire safety.

Let's Talk

By Rob Jones
President
Virginia Beach
Education Assoc.

This week's article is written by Sarah Chapman, guidance counselor at Princess Anne Junior High School.

Scene 1:

It is 3:45 on a weekday afternoon. Susie (grade four) comes into the kitchen and heads for the refrigerator.

Mom: How was school today?
Susie: (nonchalantly) Oh, fine. We had those tests.

Mom: Tests! What tests! You didn't even study last night! You watched the Cosby Show! What do you mean you took a test without even studying?

Susie: It's okay, Mom. Calm down. I wasn't supposed to study. These were those special tests you know where you have to color in the little circles.

Susie is right. She wasn't supposed to study for the tests she took—standardized tests—at least, not the night before, anymore than you would go on a diet the night before your yearly physical.

Just as you measure your weight and height and other vital signs periodically by having a physical checkup, one of the ways we find out how our students are doing in school and how well our schools are doing is by having our students take standardized tests.

According to an instruction packet prepared by the Virginia Department of Education, the purposes of these tests, referred to as the Virginia State Assessment Program, are to provide information concerning:

•The success of the public schools, both in relation to past performance and to that of the nation.

•Specific strengths and weaknesses in curricula and/or instructional programs.

•The status of individual students in attaining the academic skills and knowledge considered important within Virginia and across the nation.

During the last two weeks in March, the Assessment Program will be conducted in Virginia Beach in grades four, eight and eleven. Because the tests themselves are periodically reviewed and changed, a new series will be given this year in order to reflect changes in curricula and student populations. The Iowa Tests of Basic Skills will be given in grades four, and eight and the Tests of Achievement and Proficiency will be used in grade eleven. Additionally, ninth graders will be given the opportunity to take the Differential Aptitude Tests, which, given in combination with a career questionnaire, will assist students in matching their individual aptitudes to various careers and occupations.

Back to Susie. You may ask, "What kind of things could a test ask that you can't study for?" Achievement tests cover a vast amount of skills and knowledge that have been learned over more than even a single year in school. They cover areas such as, vocabulary, reading, math, language skills, reference skills, science and social studies. A student's score reflects learning that has been ongoing.

Another question might be, "But aren't there some things that will help a student to score better?" The answer is yes.

Here are some general principles of test-taking, especially for standardized, multiple-choice tests, (taken from a leaflet prepared by the Virginia Beach City Public Schools).

1. Be prepared — have proper rest, attitude, supplies.
2. Begin work immediately. Don't waste time.

3. Don't spend too much time on one question. Answer those you're sure of first, then go back.

4. Be careful when changing answers. Usually your first response is correct.

5. Listen carefully to directions and practice questions.

6. Ask the examiner for clarification when necessary.

7. Consider all choices. The last one may be the correct answer.

8. Attempt to answer every question. Make an "educated guess" if necessary.

9. Be aggressive. Don't give up after a hard question.

10. Keep your place on the answer sheet. Be sure you're placing your marks on the correct line.

Scene 2: It is 3:45 on a weekday afternoon, several weeks later. Susie (grade four) comes into the kitchen and hands her mother a piece of paper.

Susie: Look, Mom! We got our scores back from the Iowa tests! I made seventy-ninth percentile on math!

Mom: Seventy-nine! That's barely passing! Susie, you're used to making B's in math. What happened?

Susie: Nothing, Mom. These scores aren't like grades in school. There's nothing wrong with seventy-nine! Our guidance counselor explained it to us today. Read this, and then you can call her if you want.

Susie has learned a good deal about math and other things in school. She has learned, too, a bit about standardized tests. The scores a student receives are NOT anything like grades. A student's performance is compared to that of a national sample of students. When scores come home, parents should read the accompanying explanation carefully and then contact their child's guidance counselor or principal for further clarification, if necessary.

festival itself is centered around the tasty fruit, the strawberry. In fact, the strawberry that we know was "discovered" in Virginia Beach back in 1607 by Christopher Newport and his settlers who spotted them growing wild near the area we now call Cape Henry.

This variety was carried back to Europe and crossed with European varieties that same century, and is the basis for the many varieties we use today. In fact, the variety from Virginia Beach has been named Fragaria Virginiana. To salute that fact locally, the official city seal of Virginia Beach has strawberry leaves circling the symbol of today's Virginia Beach. This is why the partnership of the merchants and citizens of Pungo with the City of Virginia Beach came together to put this festival into being. It is a community-sponsored event with proceeds from last year of over $18,000 going directly back into the com-

Various local groups, from churches to civic organizations, will be preparing homemade strawberry ice cream, taste tempting strawberry shortcakes, fresh strawberry jams and jellies, made from scratch homemade biscuits, with strawberries, strawberry pies and cakes. The list is endless on ways you can taste and enjoy strawberries besides just having some just-picked strawberries to enjoy. Of course other food items will be available, from pit cooked barbecue, hamburgers, chicken, soft drinks, fresh seafood, delicious desserts; something for everyone to quench your thirst and hunger.

Craftshow

Besides food to taste and enjoy, a craft show featuring products from throughout the area will be open on both days. Games for the whole family to participate in, or sit back and enjoy, will be offered both days and will include pony rides and carnival rides.

Live entertainment with several different musical groups will be set up to entertain you all day long from two separate stages. Also street dancing will be held along Princess Anne Road, down the middle of the festival area, which is closed during the festival hours. Displays by several local business and agricultural firms will be set-up, including many different places of farm equipment used now and in the past on the farm. Exhibits and experts from many different local organizations will be there to answer your questions. Petting zoos provided by local farms, the Virginia Zoo, 4-H and other groups also will be present.

Parade

To begin all the activity on Saturday, May 28 a parade will be held down Princess Anne Road from the Old Fairgrounds/Airfield to just past the Pungo Shopping Center, starting at 11 a.m.

Floats, vintage cars, clowns, marching units, bands, horse groups and the contestants for the two festival pageants will be part of the parade, besides the honorary "Witch of Pungo," "Mayor of Pungo" and Grand Marshall.

Parking and transportation will be available to the festival area with shuttle service being planned from several outlying locations. Parking space for over 25,000 vehicles will be provided at the festival area itself. Plus, there will be an area set aside at the festival for handicapped parking.

Make plans now for May 28 and 29, for the Fifth Annual Pungo Strawberry Festival.

For further information call or write to Pungo Strawberry Festival, P.O. Box 6158, Virginia Beach, Virginia 23456 or call (804) 721-6001.

Oh yes, I almost forgot the pie eating contests, military aircraft flyovers, golf tournament, 5K Run, plus so much more.

Donald G. Shomette

Donald G. Shomette, noted marine author, will speak on the topic of his 1985 book, "Pirates on the Chesapeake: Being a True Account of Pirates, Picaroons and Raiders on Chesapeake Bay 1610-1807," on Wednesday, March 16 at 7:30 p.m. at the Virginia Beach Resort and Conference Center, 2800 Shore Drive.

His discussion, accompanied with slides, begins with the advent of piracy to the Chesapeake, and continues with discussion on pirates such as Captain John James, Captain Louis Guitier and the "Golden Age of Piracy," in which such evil notables as Blackbeard, Hornigold, Fly and Bonnet came to Chesapeake.

The American Revolution gave birth to yet another breed of pirate, the "picaroons" who preyed upon bay shipping. The final episode begins with the notorious Chesapeake-Leopard incident and concludes with the final act of piracy on the bay called the Othello affair in 1807.

Shomette is a noted marine archaeologist, historian and author. Since 1974 when he first became Director of Nautical Archaeological Associates, Shomette has led numerous marine investigations, including most recently the National Geographic Society Survey of the shipwreck New Jersey. One of Shomette's most popular works is "Shipwrecks on the Chesapeake: Maritime Disasters on Chesapeake Bay and its Tributaries, 1608-1978."

Landon

been a resident for 25 years.

Landon did the sitework and bulkhead for the Lynnhaven Dry Storage Marina. He also designed sewerage treatment and pumping for facilities in Virginia Beach, Williamsburg and Woodbridge.

In the Kingsmill community in Williamsburg, a busy corporate center he designed several foot bridges, bicycle trails and did work on the dam.

Many people don't realize the process that goes into the engineering of building for example, like a foot bridge.

Landon explained that the soil must first be tested to see if it has structural capacity. Geological and geotechnical capacities must be analyzed. An engineer must determine these computations and decide what he wants to do and how he wants to do it with the available information.

Then he must decide what materials to use for the capable loading, such as concrete or steel. For example, a foot bridge might be thought to not withhold much pressure but actually it is built with the worse possible scenario in mind. A fire nearby could possibly cause many individuals to pile onto the bridge. The loading would have to withstand that pressure. With that basic analysis in mind the structure could then be designed with a drawing.

Specifications of the plans would be found in the legal section of a newspaper for contractors to bid on. Their bids are sealed in an envelope until all the bids are in. The lowest bidder normally is selected.

Award of the contract is then signed and the contractor receives a notice to begin construction in a specific time frame. The engineer oversees the project and conducts a final inspection to make sure that the job was done in accordance with the specifications. If the work is not deemed adequate the contractor has one year to make the project right.

"The engineer is involved from when he first talks to the owner until possibly a year after the project is done," Landon said.

In 1976, Landon began working with the City of Portsmouth serving as a public utility engineer, later an associate city engineer and finally as the chief public works engineer.

He was named the Outstanding Employee of the Portsmouth Public Works Department in 1981.

Landon said that one of the two most important people that has an influence on his career was Ellis B. Hilton, who was the director of the Portsmouth Public Works from 1969 until 1985. Hilton died last week. The other figure was George Langley McDonald.

Landon left Portsmouth in February of 1983 and began working at the Norfolk Naval base. His initial responsibility at the base was designing criteria essential to the body of knowledge used in architecture to design buildings.

Governor declares middle level education week

Gov. Gerald L. Baliles has declared this week "National Middle Level Education Week in Virginia" to recognize the "unique function" middle level schools provide youth.

George McGovern, principal, Lynnhaven Jr. High School, met with Baliles recently along with other governing board members of Virginia Association of Secondary School Principals to witness the signing of the proclamation recognizing "Middle Level Education Week in Virginia."

"This is the second time Virginia's governor has devoted a special week to the American institution termed: The middle school," said Randy D. Barack, VASSP executive director.

"The governor's cooperation with school principals of the commonwealth and earnest intent on focusing attention on middle level schools is commendable," he said.

The annual week is sponsored by the Virginia Association of Secondary School Principals in the commonwealth and nationally to draw attention to learning in the sixth through ninth grades. Middle level schools throughout Virginia and other states will schedule special events during this week to draw attention to adolescent students, including parent visitations, exchanges with other schools, presentations to the community and student recognition activities.

"An adequate understanding of the distinctive mission of the middle level school is necessary for that mission to succeed," wrote Baliles in his proclamation. The governor recognized this event because: "Early adolescents are undergoing dramatic, physical, social, emotional, and intellectual growth, and are especially vulnerable;

"The habits and values established during early adolescence have critical, life-long influence; and "This influence impacts directly on the future health and welfare of our nation."

McGovern is the Region 2 director of VASSP, which includes the school divisions of the Tidewater area. VASSP — the professional association for school administrators of middle level and high schools — distributed copies of the proclamation to division superintendents and principals of all public and private middle level schools in the commonwealth.

Farmer's Market food drive set

The Virginia Beach Farmer's Market is sponsoring a food drive at the Farmer's Market on Saturday, March 19 from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m.

The food will be collected next to the Market office. Donations will go to the Foodbank of Southeastern Virginia. Non-perishable items are preferred; however, fresh fruits and vegetables will also be accepted.

Nearly 350 local charities are members of the Foodbank, which is a non-profit clearinghouse for donated food and related products, serving needy people at risk of hunger and illness in South Hampton Roads and on the Eastern Shore.

The Farmer's Market Food Drive is being held because of the long winter months and the tough time of the year for many people who can't afford the high cost of fuel bills and the expense of food for an entire family at the same time. Also, after the holiday season, the Foodbank has a harder time collecting donations from capable contributors.

One more Food Drive is scheduled at the Farmer's Market this spring, April 16.

from the new center line. If the city changes its mind, it will have no choice but to pay Davidson damages, he said.

Davidson planned to build a commercial kennel facility of 5,250 square feet for ten dogs, an 1,800 square-foot facility for the boarding of 10 horses and a 864 square-foot storage shed.

As for the house, Davidson received a conditional use permit for the house on Oct. 14, 1985. About 18 months later, the applicant asked City Council to waive the right-of-way reservation required as a condition of the permit for the relocation of Princess Anne Road. The request was denied by Council on March 23, 1987, but the road alignment was changed enough to keep the house clear of the right-of-way.

Davidson's property contains 13 acres.

Back Bay to begin charging

Visitors will begin paying fees to enter Back Bay National Wildlife Refuge (NWR) Starting Sunday, May 1, according to a press release.

Refuge Manager Anthony D. Leger recently made this announcement stating that "Visitors will have the option of paying a daily fee or purchasing a seasonal pass."

According to the press release, Leger said, "the Emergency Wetlands Resources Act of 1986 authorized the charging of entrance fees at designated national wildlife refuges. These fees will shift a portion of the economic burden for use of the refuge from the general public to the direct user."

Proceeds from the entrance fees will be used primarily to fund future wetland acquisitions. Fees will be collected at the Refuge's main entrance located at 4005 Sandpiper Road and on the beach at the Refuge's northern boundary, adjacent to Little Island City Park.

"The main entrance will be staffed by gate attendants and the beach collection point will consist of an honor system," Leger said, in a press release.

During periods of low use, the honor system will be in effect at both entrance points. Daily fees will be $3 per private motor vehicle and $1 for pedestrians and bicyclists.

Frequent visitors may purchase a $10 Duck Stamp (Migratory Bird Hunting and Conservation Stamp), which serves as a year-round (July through June) Refuge pass for the purchaser and accompanying passengers. Other passes include the Golden Eagle Passport available for $25 per year; the free, life-time Golden Age Passport for those 62 years of age or older; and the free Golden Access Passport for those who are blind or otherwise disabled. All passes and the single visit permit provide access for the permittee, and his or her accompanying spouse, children and parents. Children under age 16 are admitted free of charge. Passports are available at the Refuge weekdays during normal working hours.

All proceeds from the sale of duck stamps will be deposited in the Migratory Bird Conservation Account to purchase wetland habitat. Amounts collected from daily fees and passports will be deposited as follows: 70 percent into the Migratory Bird Conservation Fund and the remaining 30 percent to be used for refuge operations and maintenance. According to the press release, Leger said, "The collection of fees will

Laszlo Aranyi art show set

The Tidewater Artists Association will hold its 1988 "Laszlo Aranyi Memorial Juried Exhibition" at the Virginia Beach Arts Center for the fourth consecutive year. The show opens with a reception on Sunday, March 27, from 5 to 7 p.m.

TAA, Southeastern Virginia's oldest artist-run organization, has dedicated the 1988 exhibit to the memory of Laszlo Aranyi, former president of TAA, distinguished architect, artist and musician. Over $1000 in prize money will be awarded by juror Jane Kessler, curator of contemporary art at the Mint Museum in Charlotte, N.C. Kessler will present an exhibition-related gallery talk prior to the reception on March 27, at 4:30 p.m.

The Laszlo Aranyi Memorial Juried Exhibition continues through Thursday, April 28. Arts Center gallery hours are Monday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., and Sunday, 1 to 4 p.m. Call VBAC at 425-0000 for further information.

Norwegian Lady celebration set

A colorful facet of Virginia Beach history will be highlighted on Saturday, March 26, at the 26th annual Memorial Service for the oceanfront's "Norwegian Lady."

This statue, erected in Virginia Beach in 1962, is a replica of a wooden figurehead washed ashore in 1891 following a boating tragedy off the coast.

The "Norwegian Lady" has been preserved, since 1962, as a memorial to all men of the sea by the Ladies Auxiliary to the Virginia Beach Borough Volunteer Fire Department.

The ceremony, to begin at 2 p.m. at the statue at 25th street and Atlantic Avenue, will feature music by the Atlantic Fleet Band. The Virginia Beach Fire Department Honor Guard and amphibious LARC vehicle will also take part, and Vice Mayor Meyera Oberndorf will relate the history of the "Norwegian Lady."

Those who attend will receive free admission to the Maritime Museum at the conclusion of the ceremony.

Elder Day Care Olympics May 27

The sixth annual Elder Day Care Olympics will be held at the M.E. Cox Center for Elder Day Care Inc. on Sunday, May 27, at 644 Lynnhaven Road. The event will run from 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. The raindate is Friday, June 3.

The Olympics will consist of seven centers in the Hampton Roads area participating in this event with some 100 elderly adults ranging in age from 60 years to 99 years who will be going for the gold.

This Olympic event is similar to the "Special Olympics" held nationwide in that these elderly are "special," because of memory impairment due to illness, strokes, Alzheimer's disease, etc., but they are still able to compete in less strenuous and physically demanding activities.

Festivities will begin at 11:30 a.m. with lunch. At noon the games will begin. The games this year will be horseshoes, ball distance throw, lawn darts, basketball, soda can game, ring toss and checkers. Awards and prizes will be awarded to all participants, with special awards given to first, second, and third place winners in each event.

Virginia Beach Vice Mayor Meyera Oberndorf will be on hand to cheer on the participants and the Professional Firefighters from Local #2924 also will be on hand to help put up the tents and assist with any possible medical emergency.

Virginia Beach's Race Candidate Comments

In observance of the city's first direct election of the mayor, The Virginia Beach Sun is publishing this feature as a public service through May 3. The councilmanic election is May 10. All mayoral candidates have been invited to contribute 100 words each week on a topic they select.

Taxes up; progress down

This is to introduce myself as a candidate for Mayor for the City of Virginia Beach. For those who do not know me or remember, I served on the Virginia Beach City Council for twelve years (1974-1986). I served as Vice-Mayor two years and as Mayor from 1980 to 1982. I am a Tidewater native and have practiced dentistry in Virginia Beach since 1960. I am married and have three grown daughters. I decided to run for the mayor's seat simply because I see nothing productive happening at City Hall anymore. Taxes are up and progress is down.

Spirit of cooperation

This year we celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the City of Virginia Beach. On Tuesday, May 10, 1988 another milestone will occur. This milestone will be the popular election of the mayor. I along with the Beach voters who expressed themselves through a referendum hope that a new era of political harmony will be achieved without the infighting that has become routine. I pledge, that my primary objective will be to foster a spirit of cooperation among all our elected officials and the public, with a single objective... the advancement of Virginia Beach.

Beyond crisis management

There have been tremendous changes in Virginia Beach in its first 25 years. As we approach the next quarter-century we face significant problems that will affect our quality of life unless we have strong leadership. We must be both near and farsighted in addressing existing concerns of uncontrolled growth, inadequacy of roads, dwindling water resources and escalating school enrollments. I am very concerned that present City leadership has failed to resolve these issues. I have entered Virginia Beach politics with a firm commitment to addressing and solving issues beyond crisis management to an orderly and planned growth of our city.

Rad Moore: Satisfaction is his reward as housing inspector

By Jeri Guarracino
City of Virginia Beach
Public Information Office

Every once in a while you meet someone who is so dedicated to their job that you step back and ask, "Is this person for real?" That was my initial reaction after meeting Rad Moore from the Department of Permits and Inspections for the City of Virginia Beach.

As one of two housing inspectors for the city's target neighborhoods, Moore's job is to make sure the houses in those areas meet the city's minimum housing code.

Target neighborhoods are those areas designated to be of low or moderate income levels. The residents in these areas are eligible for financial assistance provided through the Department of Housing and Community Development to make repairs on their homes or to build new ones. Demolition of existing structures and the clearance of unsightly debris also is covered.

When Moore begins a project he attends a Civic League meeting to explain what he is doing.

He then visits every house in the area to inspect for interior and exterior violations.

"After I write up the violations, I send a notice to the legal owner giving him 30 days to make repairs," said Moore. "Most people in these areas don't have the money to repair their houses but they want their neighborhoods to look nice."

That's when the Department of Housing and Community Development steps in to provide the residents with financial assistance to improve their homes or build new ones. In many instances, residents are relocated while new homes are built.

Please see Housing, page 5

Rad Moore, housing inspector, cleans up the target neighborhoods. The house in the background is scheduled to be torn down so a new one can be built for its owners.

Crack down on smoking in schools is good

The Virginia Beach School Board has approved a policy restricting cigarette smoking in public schools.

Teachers and staff members are allowed one room per school in which to smoke. And that room cannot be a classroom, a cafeteria, a conference room, an auditorium, a library or a restroom.

Some schools will have two lounges for teachers and staff members to use. One will be for smokers and one for non-smokers. This is so non-smokers will have the option of not inhaling poisonous secondary smoke.

What teachers and staff members do on their own time is their business. However, when they are inside the walls of the school buildings, teaching students, they should set an example.

However, many Virginia Beach schools are crowded and there may not be room for a luxury such as two lounges. The new policy states that non-smokers must be accommodated first, meaning that some schools may not have a room designated for smoking; in effect, banning all smoking in that school.

Although school teachers and staff members who smoke may be angered by this move, they should be thankful that the School Board did not across-the-board ban smoking altogether in the schools. That proposal almost passed.

The new policy goes into effect immediately, but there is an option of allowing a grace period before enforcing the new rule.

Although restricting smoking in schools may anger some teachers and staff members, it is unquestionably a good move. They are supposed to be setting a good example for their students, and smoking is a deadly habit. It's as simple as that.

The new policy restricting smoking is a good one. — T.M.S.

AIDS curriculum should include "safe sex" info

Virginia Beach has a new AIDS education curriculum for city schools.

This curriculum is a long and involved program whereby different grade levels will learn about different aspects of the deadly disease.

For example:

- Tenth-graders will learn about past epidemics and discuss civil rights of AIDS patients.
 - Ninth- and seventh-graders will learn what causes AIDS and how it can be spread.
 - Eighth-graders will discuss how AIDS relates to other sexually transmitted diseases and the possibility of a vaccine for AIDS being discovered.
- However, no grade levels will learn how to prevent AIDS and/or how to practice safe sex.

Although the curriculum is a comprehensive one, it appears on the surface that the School Board wants students to think only of abstinence, and not safe sex. Students are not told that condoms have been determined to be the best way to reduce AIDS among sexually active people.

One member of the Tidewater AIDS Crisis Task Force said that teachers tell students not to drink, but tell them that if they do, they shouldn't drive drunk.

It's the same concept. The School Board can convey the message of abstinence, but it should realize that not all students are going to listen.

Although the School Board should be commended by its effort to educate its students on AIDS, especially as low as the seventh-grade level, it should not ignore the importance of the message of safe sex.

The most important reason for telling students about AIDS is to save lives. By speaking only of abstinence and not other ways to prevent the transmission of the disease, teachers are only telling half the story.

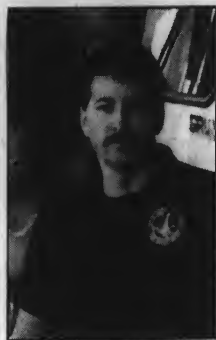

There will be students who are sexually active no matter what they are told about the dangers. Those students need to be taught how to protect themselves and their partners. — T.M.S.

Careful getting hair cut

By Tina Swedler
Staff Writer

I recently got my hair cut and it didn't turn out as I had expected it to.

That picture that you see of me up there isn't really what I look like anymore. You see, I just recently moved here from Chicago. In Chicago I had a hair stylist who always cut my hair just the way I wanted her to.

However, upon moving here, I had to find someone new to cut my hair. This is a difficult task. It's hard to find someone you can trust and someone who won't make you want to run home and stick a baseball cap on your head.

The haircut that I just got was, should I say, a wee bit too short for my tastes. Have you ever noticed that what may be an inch to you is most likely going to be two or more inches to a hairstylist? I think they give out different types of rulers in beauty school.

For some reason, I always wind up with a haircut that is not to my liking. Lucky for me, my hair grows fast. But, I knew I was in trouble when the woman who was cutting my hair said, "Well, if you don't like it, it will always grow out." I guess it is possible to stop the person cutting your hair in the middle of the haircut and tell him or her that they are cutting it too short, but for some reason I never realize it until it is too late. I seem to have some kind of blind faith in hairstylists.

And don't think that it is just women hairstylists who do this. I once went to a male hairstylist, and he decided that I would look "so much better" in short hair, and proceeded to cut a (well I guess not ALL, but it seemed like it) of it off.

The haircut that I just got was, should I say, a wee bit too short for my tastes.

I am not sure if men have this problem when they get their hair cut. I think it's just that most men don't really worry too much about what their hair looks like, because they can always put a baseball cap on their head. At least that's what most of the guys I know do. It seems as if men don't worry that their hair has been cut too short, because they think their hair can never be too short. Or maybe they really just don't care.

Anyway, I do care. My hair grows very fast (which I guess is a blessing in disguise), and I have to seek out a hairstylist every four to six weeks. This will soon become a major stressful event in my life, unless I find someone who adheres to the same form of measurement that I do.

I don't know what the solution to this problem is, except, maybe, to be very careful when selecting a hairstylist. Screen them as best you can. Give them a ruler and explain what an inch is.

One good rule of thumb: if the hairstylist's hair looks like something you wouldn't wish on your worst enemy, get out of there quick!

Now, I am not trying to put down hairstylists, because I know it is difficult to cut a stranger's hair, especially when you don't really know what they want done. And, most of the time, they don't even know what they want. I know I have gone into a beauty shop and said, "Well, what can you do with it?" So, I guess it works both ways.

I just wanted to let you know that although my picture doesn't really look like me anymore, I won't be taking a new one until my hair grows out a little.

Typos and integrity

By Greg Goldfarb
Managing Editor

This is an editorial comment no newspaper should have to make, but professionalism dictates that I do.

All too often readers of The Virginia Beach Sun are going to run across typographical errors that slip through our proofreading process. Whether in a story we say the mayor, for example, is "setting the state" when it should read "setting the stage," or whether the typo occurs in a headline, there are no legitimate excuses.

More astute readers understand that the sentences are supposed to say and mean, but that's not the point. When we have typos we hurt our own integrity and credibility. And believe me, when typos occur it grieves and frustrates no one more than me and the news staff.

The Virginia Beach Sun news staff promises in the future that unintentional careless typographical errors will be kept to an absolute minimum. Of course, they will never be permanently eliminated. Newspapers are published by humans and humans are not always perfect. But our readers deserve, expect and demand the best; and with your understanding and patience, we will continually strive to meet that goal.

Management certification recommended

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

Virginia's health director, Dr. William Crawford, has recommended the certification of managers, "the equality control people who are on-duty at all times," as a way of increasing overall sanitation in food-handling establishments.

Invited by City Council to discuss the recent outbreak of hepatitis in the city, Crawford said that Virginia Beach is not alone. Current outbreaks are being experienced in Asheville, N.C.; Louisville, Ky.; and Lawton, Okla.

He said that when the number of food handlers are considered and the comparatively few outbreaks, some good hygiene apparently is being practiced.

Crawford said that while doctors are required to report hepatitis, "we feel a fair amount are unreported." He also said that labs are not presently required to report cases, but that the state is planning to change that.

He spoke of several different kinds of hepatitis. The present concern is the very contagious but mild hepatitis which is transmitted by poor sanitation.

New $430,000 ladder-truck in service

Fire Safety

By Martin Grube
Master Fire Fighter

The firefighters assigned to Fire Station 16 located on South Plaza Trail received a new ladder truck recently. This new truck replaced the aging 1975 model that was put out of service in April 1987.

The new ladder truck was manufactured by the Grumman

Corp. in Roanoke, Va. Costing $430,000, this unit is constructed from aluminum and stainless steel. Weighing approximately 73,000 pounds, it has an automatic transmission and power steering. The tilt steering wheel allows the firefighters to slide in and out of the driver's seat when they are wearing their fire coats. The new cab design provides better visibility by using larger windows and mirrors.

This is the second ladder truck Virginia Beach has purchased equipped with a water pump and fire hoses. The Haygood fire station has a pump/ladder combination more commonly called a "Quint." If the quint arrives on the scene before the pumper and needs water quickly, the ladder crew can hook up to a fire hydrant and extinguish the blaze without using any additional pumps. The pump on this new ladder truck can flow over 1,500 gallons of water per minute. The ladder mounted on the top of the truck can extend to 95 feet in the air. If you are wondering how far that will reach at a hotel, it will be around the seventh or eighth floor.

In April 1987, the old ladder truck assigned to Fire Station 16 was sold to the South Hill Fire Department. South Hill is located two hours west of Virginia Beach at Interstate 85 and Route 58. The members of South Hill Fire Department were very excited to receive the ladder truck and I made several trips out there to conduct training classes on the unit. Fire Chief Jimmy Crowder recently stated that they have used it several times on major fires and they were very pleased with it.

Virginia Beach has five ladder companies with three firefighters assigned to each truck per shift. The ladder companies are located at Haygood, Oceana, Kempsville, Beach Borough and the Plaza fire stations. There is also one ladder in reserve used only when one of the other ladders is down for repairs.

Drop by and see this new ladder truck at the Plaza fire station. We are located on South Plaza Trail next to the library. Don't forget to attend the dedication of the Norwegian Lady on Saturday, March 26, at 2 p.m. The ceremony will be at 25th and Oceanfront.

"Ladder 16," the Virginia Beach Fire Department's newest ladder truck.

Homes and school: Restoring the trust

Let's Talk

By Rob Jones
President
Virginia Beach
Education Assoc.

The Virginia Beach Education Association this week contributed an article by Mary Hatwood Futrell, president, National Education Association.

James Comer, a child psychiatrist at Yale University, has moved the education reform debate an important step forward by taking an insightful look backward.

Comer's contribution: the notion that real reform demands fundamental changes in both the relationships between adults and children and in the relationships among adults themselves.

"All adults involved with children either help or thwart children's growth and development," writes Comer, "whether we like it, intend it, or not."

In the United States today, Comer argues, adults—because of their isolation from each other—are depriving children of steady and responsible guidance critical to their development.

In Issues '88, the just-published National Education Association (NEA) annual journal on education, Comer contrasts today's social climate with the climate of his own childhood.

"When I was in elementary school in the 1940s," writes Comer, "I went on a shopping expedition to the A&P store every Friday with my parents and siblings. I can't remember a week that we did not encounter someone from the school—the custodian, principal, teacher, school clerk. There was always an exchange of information about how we were doing in school, what was expected of us and what to do if we didn't meet those expectations. The positive relationship between my parents and school staff—and the probability of a weekly report—made it difficult for me to do anything short of living up to the expressed expectations."

In America today, this once thin line between school and neighborhood has become a chasm.

The revolution in transportation, notes Comer, "allows people to live long distances from where they work. These conditions decrease the power and influence of parents, teachers, religious leaders and other local authority figures. There's a concomitant decrease in the predictability of the environment and children's sense of trust, belonging and place."

This sense of trust, belonging and place, Comer argues, is essential to learning. What Comer sees so clearly is that the massive social upheavals and demographic changes of the post-World War II era have generated a society lacking its former intimacy and warmth. The high-tech world is short on the neigh-borly cohesiveness so many of us recall—and so many of us miss. The world is a bit more icy and impersonal than it once was.

Comer's analysis forces us to recognize this development as an educational problem. Learning is not a mechanical process, and student minds, Comer reminds us, are not computers. Learning cannot be separated from the web of human relationships in and around the school experience.

Restructuring education must mean, above all, improving the quality of these relationships.

Comer puts it well: "Teachers complain about behavior problems and the lack of student motivation. Parents complain that they feel unwanted by schools—except when they're needed to control their children."

The buck stops nowhere.

Comer does not underestimate the challenge of reclaiming the more cooperative social dynamics of an earlier time. But schools, Comer insists, can do it—in fact are already doing it. Comer points to schools in low-income, inner-city Connecticut districts where such reclamation projects have in fact succeeded.

These schools have developed strategies that link principals to representatives of the key adult groups in the school—teachers, other school staff, parents. Working together, these groups have put together "pot luck suppers, fashion shows, book fairs, workshops by teachers for parents and a variety of other academic and social projects" that have "restored the trust between home and school."

In this trusting atmosphere, school staff and parents are "able to discourage undesirable behavior and encourage desirable behavior, and to respond to the thoughts, fears, concerns and problems of students."

Students in schools where Comer has worked have shown dramatic increases in academic achievement. Comer's analysis is more than a theoretical exercise. His ideas offer a practical approach to restructuring education—and they deserve our attention.

Virginia Power gets new office

Virginia Power has announced plans for the construction of a new $7 million business office and support complex.

The project will take a year to complete and a March or April 1989 target date has been set.

"The rapid growth of customers with a record number of new electric connects in recent years in the western subdivisions of Virginia Beach requires that we begin planning for expansion in order to properly service these customers," said W.H. Blackwell Jr., Virginia Power's Eastern Division vice president.

The new Virginia Beach West District office will be located in Kempville at 4919 Princess Anne Road and will service some 78,000 customer accounts by 1989, a Virginia Power press release said.

The 13.74-acre site will include a business office, storage and support facilities for construction and operations personnel, meter reading, and an engineering section to design facilities for new customers.

The contract for construction of the facility has been awarded to the Whiting-Turner Construction Company of Richmond.

"Virginia Beach West expansion will impact some 107,000 customers almost immediately. Approximately 76,000 of these accounts will be identified over the next two months and will eventually be served by the new district," Blackwell said.

Virginia Power meter readers began a new schedule for meter reading routes that began Friday, March 18, and will continue for a 60-day period. This schedule will affect some 76,000 Virginia Beach, 23,500 Norfolk and 7,500 Chesapeake electric customer accounts. The result will be one short billing period of electricity usage for some, and a longer than usual billing period for others, according to the release.

Accounts will be billed for as little as 15 days and others as long as 45 days. After this one adjustment in meter reading dates, all bills will return to their normal length of 26 to 34 days, according to the release. Ultimately, the change will expedite meter reading time with a subsequent reduction in cost to the customers, the release said.

Virginia Power will be inserting notices into bills about the changes and will attend homeowners association meetings to reduce confusion and minimize financial hardships, the release said.

The majority of electric customers in Virginia Beach will continue to be served from the First Colonial Road Virginia Power offices, according to the release. Expansion of those facilities was recently completed.

Students Corey McGinnis, left, and Pete Humes and teacher Claudia Spencer, all from First Colonial High School, were among some 90 students and educators from across the state to participate in the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts' three-day Youth Residency Program in Richmond.

Their attendance at the museum's annual program was sponsored by the Virginia Beach Arts Center, an affiliate of the Virginia Museum.

This year's theme was "Artward Bound: Creative Problem Solving." It was designed to engage participants in "true-to-life museum problem solving, through which they get a direct, interactive and multifaceted exposure to the museum's resources, operations and professions," said Mary Wayne Fritzsche, manager of the museum's education and outreach division.

Program highlights this year included a scavenger hunt through the museum and its galleries, workshops, an evening at the theatre and tours of artist's exhibitions at local galleries.

Decorator house

April 18 through May 8.

Twenty-one designers will decorate Sajo's 22 rooms, eight bathers, and four hallways using modern and traditional design concepts that will provide visitors with new and exciting decorating ideas for their own homes. In addition to the displayed rooms, the Decorator Show House will also feature a boutique, tea room, plant sales, landscaped areas and several items available for purchase.

Built in 1948 by Samuel Jones, president and owner of Berkeley Machine Works and Foundry Co., Inc., Sajo Manor is a four and half acre waterfront estate. The Georgian-style mansion features a combination of Colonial and European designs as well as hand carved woodwork that typifies the craftsmanship of traditional area master carvers. Unique to the exterior of the mansion are the paying bricks used for construction. These bricks were salvaged from main Street in Princeton, West Virginia by Jones and then were used to erect the house and build the front walk, Sajo Manor's present owners, Messrs. Donald S. Lewis, Sr. and Jr., have graciously donated the use of the estate for the Virginia Opera's Decorator Showhouse project.

Sajo will be open to the public April 18 through May 8, from 10:00 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Saturday; Sundays, 12 to 5 p.m. Tickets are $8 at the door; $7 in advance; group rates $7 each. Housing inspector

For example, if a new home is built for $43,000, a qualified resident could get a $15,000 grant to apply to the house. The cost of the house to the owner is then $28,000. Payments are based on 10 percent of his income with three percent interest on the loan. Funding is provided from federal and city funds.

Moore said that most people are skeptical of the program at first, but soon change their minds.

"If someone has a house beyond repair, we'll go in and tear it down," said Moore. "We clean up their yard and it doesn't cost them anything. You tell them that and they say, 'There has got to be a catch.' Then they see the improvements being made and get caught up in the excitement."

Moore said he likes to see the changes that occur in the neighborhoods. "I really got a lot of satisfaction. I mean, some of these people have never had indoor plumbing before. Besides, I really care about these people. Once the trust is formed, you've got a friend for life."

Moore often becomes personally involved with these people. On Saturdays, he brings his truck to the Lake Smith area and helps people clean up their yards. He visits an old woman in the Seatack area so she doesn't get lonely. And he tells another homeowner if he cleans up her yard they'll have a cookout.

"This job has really made me appreciate the things I have," said Moore. "Here I am worrying about buying a new outboard motor and these people are worried about putting food on the table."

Besides the rebuilding program, Moore responds to housing complaints in the areas. During the spring and summer months it is not unusual for him to make 50 stops a day to follow up on complaints.

Moore, who lives in Portsmouth, has been with the city of Virginia Beach for 14 years and in his present position for three years. "I love my job," he said. "People think I'm crazy because I actually like to come to work on Monday mornings." He said he has no intention of leaving his job as there is still too much for him to accomplish.

The thirty-eight-year-old inspector is married and has an eighteen-year-old daughter named Kim.

City taking over most lifesaving services

By Lee Cahill

City Council Reporter

The City of Virginia Beach is taking over the lifeguard services from most of its oceanfront beaches.

City Council Monday, by a vote of 6-5, rejected the only proposal it had received to provide lifesaving services and equipment rentals at Fort Story, the resort area from 40th Street to Rudee Inlet, Croatan and Camp Pendleton.

The proposal was submitted by Virginia Beach Lifesaving Service Inc. (VBLS) the company headed by Kent Hinnant. The company represents a merger of two services, the Virginia Beach Patrol and the Ocean Rescue, which have had the franchises since 1983. After four years of operating the services under two separate franchises, the two services combined last year, the fifth year of the franchise agreement.

At the same time, Council appropriated $491,308 to initiate the municipal lifesaving services through the Parks and Recreation Department. Approximately $200,000 is expected to be generated by equipment rentals with the remainder coming from the general fund balance.

Earlier, Council had awarded a franchise for the lifeguard and beach equipment rental services at Little Island Park where the city had traditionally provided the services. The franchise was awarded to Ocean Rentals, Ltd. One other bidder for the franchise was Little Island Beach Patrol Inc., a proposed corporation.

Council discussed the VBLS issue during a 75 minute executive session following the regular Council meeting Monday. Councilman John D. Moss made the motion in open session and the vote was taken with no discussion. Voting for the motion were Moss, Vice Mayor Meyera Oberdorf, John A. Baum, Barbara Henley, Nancy Parker and Alert Balko. Opposed were Robert E. Fentress, Virginia Beach Borough Councilman; Harold Heischob; Mayor Robert G. Jones; Reba McCannan; and John Perry.

Hinnant's original bid included providing service for the two weeks preceding Memorial Day and the two weeks following Labor Day. A second proposal was made last week of $239,000 eliminating the "shoulders," the additional four weeks.

At 10:30 Monday morning, Hinnant made his lowest offer, $196,000 with the shoulders.

The city's offer was $80,000, an amount reached, said Hector Rivera, assistant city manager, based on information provided by the lifesaving company—an 1986 tax return, aggregate budget similar information.

Rivera said that the city paid the franchise $22,000 last year and the $80,000 offer was designed to allow the franchise to improve its services and to take care of higher costs. Of the $22,000, $8,000 was eventually deducted in sanctions against the franchise, Rivera said.

Councilwoman Nancy Parker, following the session, said that Hinnant's lowest offer will still well over last year's fee.

She also said that the city prefers private enterprise to do the job and hoped eventually to move out of the business.

In the past, the city has provided services at public beaches such as Little Island, Fort Story and Croatan and Pendleton. However, the resort area beaches have traditionally been served by the private sector. The resort beaches also have the highest yield in rental equipment receipts. Rivera said that last year, $286,000 was received from rentals for just half the resort beach. Rivera said that the city is moving in from the public safety point of view rather than in competition with the private sector.

Hinnant's $196,000 offer would have remained the same for the five years of the franchise.

The five-year Little Island franchise will cost the city $58,000 the first year; $60,900 the second year; $63,950 the third year; $67,150 the fourth year; and $70,510 the fifth year.

According to Harold S. Whitehurst, Parks and recreation director, there is a limited market for beach equipment rentals at the location.

Rental equipment includes chairs, umbrellas, rafts and boogie boards.

John Coates, parks supervisor, said that the department anticipates hiring 90 lifeguards and 60 attendants. Vendors for the equipment are being contacted, he said.

The city's present scale for lifesaving personnel is higher than the wages paid by the private company. City lifeguards receive $5.10 an hour for an 8½ hour day ($43.35) against $30 to $32 a day for the franchise, and supervisors receive $7 an hour ($59.50 a day) against $50 for the franchise.

Coates said that the appropriation by Council Monday will get the department through June 30. The continued cost of the service will be included in the budget after that date.

Rivera said that the $100,000 income from rentals is a conservative estimate and said that the city will try to break even. An enterprise fund will be set up for the service.

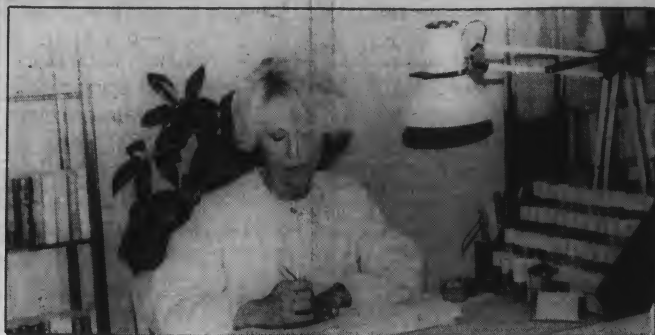

The program recommended by Crawford would involve about 3,600 managers at a cost of less than $200,000 which would be borne by the food handling establishments. The benefits of the program, he said, have been experienced in northern Virginia. He said the overall sanitation has improved there.

At present, food handlers are certified by sitting through a two-hour film on "Jack the Germ." Crawford said that it's hard to keep them awake through the presentation. The type of people employed in many restaurants, he pointed out, are teenagers or part-time employees interested only in the paycheck. One restaurant which had 50 persons on staff at one time sent out 2,000 W-2 forms.

The managers would be more career-oriented people, he said. Kal Kassir, president of the Virginia Beach Chapter of the Virginia Restaurant Association, said that the association is working with the health department to come up with effective measures. He said that the effort predates the current hepatitis outbreak.

Carla's Nail Clinique

Carla Buckman Lyle, owner of Carla's Nail Clinique, has been a fingernail technician for eight years. She has been at her present location at 4372 Holland Plaza Shoppes since Jan. 1. Hours of operation are Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m.; and on Wednesdays and Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. The nail salon is closed on Sundays and Mondays.

Lyle said most women in Virginia Beach take pretty good care of their skin and nails, but that there's always room for improvement. As a former instructor for a nail school, she stresses that in addition to being a technician, she is also an educator. She said there are many nail diseases that other nail salons don't know much about. In addition to manicures and pedicures, the salon also applies artificial nails; does body waxing and color analysis. Prices range from $10 for a manicure to $30 to $40 for the application of artificial nails.

Carla's Nail Clinique has one full-time employee, in addition to Lyle, who works predominantly on fingernails. Her name is Penny Steward. Call 486-3313 for an appointment.

The individual first identified at the Holland Road Taco Bell as a carrier of the disease, Crawford said, was first tested for Hepatitis B, the strain that is less contagious and more serious and transmitted through blood or sexual intercourse. The test came out negative. Two weeks later he was checked for Hepatitis A, the more communicable disease strain and the test was positive.

Of health inspections, he said that the only thing that an inspection tells you is that everything was acceptable at the time of the inspection.

Hepatitis prevention begins at home

By Tina Swedler
Staff Writer

Although the recent hepatitis outbreak has caused much concern in Virginia Beach, the risk of contracting Hepatitis A is, and always has been, extremely small, according to City Health Director George Sjolund.

He said the public must realize that the forty-eight cases traced to a Taco Bell on Rosemont Road were out of 16,000 meals served. He said that in reality, although no one, of course, would want to contract the disease, the risk to the public-at-large was small.

The risk of contracting hepatitis, or any intestinal infection spread by poor hygiene and improper food handling, is the same in any restaurant, whether it be fast food or otherwise, Sjolund said. "The same regulations govern food handling in all restaurants."

Sjolund said the Taco Bell cases came about when a food handler contracted hepatitis in another city and brought the illness to Virginia Beach.

No cases have been reported from restaurants since the recent outbreak, Sjolund said. "All the restaurants in the city have been visited (by members of the health department) with information given as to what should be done."

He said the proper procedures have been brought to the attention of the restaurant managers and owners and they have responded. He said they know what they need to do so as not to spread the disease.

There is heightened awareness all throughout the city, he said.

However, he added that good hygiene and the proper handling of food also needs to be practiced in the home, and not just in restaurants.

Twenty-three reported cases of hepatitis were attributed to unknown sources, Sjolund said. The unknown sources had to be in home preparation, he said.

"It is the same problem," he said. He explained that although hepatitis is not as easily spread to the public when it is spread or contracted in the home, it is just as much of a problem.

Sjolund said the main lesson to be learned from all this is that food handling is very important.

"This could have happened any time, during any year." Recent cases have been reported in Kentucky, Oklahoma, North Carolina and Washington.

Much media coverage was given to the recent hepatitis outbreak, and Sjolund said he does not think the media overplayed the issue. "The media realized folks in the community were concerned," he said, adding, "It is an outbreak; more than we usually would have."

However, he said that by alerting everyone, everybody worries. "Telling doesn't stop the illness," he said, explaining that by informing people in Virginia Beach it caused them to worry, even though there was really nothing that could have been done by that time.

Sjolund said business slowed substantially in some restaurants after the outbreak. "I hope that after the initial fear goes by, people will realize there is no danger."

Virginia Beach Mayor's Race Candidate Comments

In observance of the city's first direct election of the mayor, The Virginia Beach Sun is publishing this feature as a public service through May 3. The councilman election is May 10. All mayoral candidates have been invited to contribute 100 words each week on a topic they select.

Henry McCoy

VB: Greatest potential

"Virginia Beach has had and still has the greatest potential to be one of the finest places to live in North America. We have slipped for two or three years simply because civic leagues and parochial interests within the city have led a fragmentation of the concept that we are a unified city. Like Norfolk, that obviously has come a long way in the last fifteen years, we must think business and coordinated planning. Retail establishments, financial institutions, professions, hotels and restaurants, construction and real estate, the military, etc., are the strengths of the community. These bind us all together."

Meyera Oberndorf

Housing revenue falls short

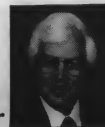

"Generally speaking, the tax revenue realized from housing doesn't pay for its requirements over the long run. That's why I support a strong economic development program which will create good jobs and gradually shift our tax base from 80% residential, 20% business to 70%-30%. This would provide service to all the housing approved and built in the past as well as future population growth. In doing this we must ensure that the industries attracted are not only financially strong, but are quality industries that provide more than minimum wage jobs and enhance the image of Virginia Beach."

Louis Pace

Personal property tax unfair

"It has long been my belief that Virginia Beach's personal property tax is unfair. There are too many people who do not pay this tax while being either renters or property owners in Virginia Beach. Taxes of $300 to $1,000 hits hard when it comes due in June. I believe a more equitable solution would be to place the tax on real estate. That way everyone living in Virginia Beach would be paying taxes instead of just a few of us."

Wright supports minimum lot area requirements

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

An attorney, known for his successful representation of land developers in numerous rezoning applications, supports a minimum lot area requirement of 10,000 square feet.

In a letter addressed to Councilman John D. Moss, Grover Wright, the attorney, states that it is not a legitimate object or purpose of zoning regulations to make the maximum possible profit for developers or builders, but to preserve the character of an area and to preserve property values and to reduce undue density of populations and congestion in the streets minimizing the strain on public services.

Moss has favored increasing the minimum lot size in the proposed Comprehensive Zoning Ordinance from 5,000 square to 10,000 square feet. Builders and developers have been pushing for the smaller-sized lots and during council discussions a compromise of 7,500 square feet has appeared to be the final compromise.

In his letter, Wright points out that when the smaller minimum lot sizes are permitted, the first thing a developer does is go to the Board of Zoning Appeals or to the governing body to get a Elrod has been the director of Virginia Beach Social Services since 1959. She describes her work as exciting and constantly changing, and she credits her success to her parents, who taught her how to be "creative and innovative."

According to Elrod, the Virginia Beach agency is unique in that it deals with every social and economic group in the city. "We deal with anyone," she said, adding that the agency protects children and adults and helps them when they are unfortunate in any sense, including financial.

The agency, among other things, carries out mandated federal and state programs. She added, "There are 70-plus churches and organizations that contribute to us."

Elrod has always felt an obligation to help other people.

Certification of managers is needed

Virginia's health director, Dr. William Crawford, has recommended the certification of food managers as a way of increasing overall sanitation in food-handling establishments, in the wake of the recent hepatitis outbreak in Virginia Beach.

Managers are defined by Crawford as "the quality control people who are on-duty at all times."

Crawford was invited by the Virginia Beach City Council recently to discuss the outbreak.

The program recommended by Crawford would involve approximately 3,600 managers at a cost of less than $200,000. The food-handling establishments would foot the bill.

According to Crawford, the benefits of the program have been felt in northern Virginia, where overall sanitation has improved.

Crawford said that presently, food handlers are certified by sitting through a two-hour film titled "Jack the Germ." He explained that it is difficult to keep employees' interest throughout the film. He said most of the time the type of people employed in many restaurants, particularly fast food restaurants, are teenagers or part-time employees interested only in the paycheck.

He explained that the managers would be more career-oriented people.

According to Kal Kassir, president of the Virginia Beach Chapter of the Virginia Restaurant Association, the association is working with the health department to come up with effective measures. According to Kassir, this effort was begun before the recent hepatitis outbreak.

Officials say that there is always a certain amount of hepatitis found in a community, and that most cases are not reported.

According to Crawford, Virginia Beach is not alone in this problem. Current outbreaks are being experienced in Asheville, N.C.; Louisville, Ky.; Lawton, Okla.; and Spokane, Wash.

However, this certification program is just what is needed in Virginia Beach. Seventy-one hepatitis cases have been reported in Virginia Beach this year, compared to four cases reported in 1987. Although the large number found this year may be attributed to better reporting this year than last, it might not. There may just be more cases of hepatitis this year than last. And it really doesn't matter anyway.

One case of hepatitis is too many. If the spread, or even start, of the disease can be prevented, then it should be.

There is no excuse for poor hygiene in a restaurant. It should be dictated to employees that they must follow proper rules, and prevent the spread of hepatitis, or any other illness.

The patrons of these restaurants put their trust into the employees and managers of those restaurants. When patrons order food, they are trusting the preparers of that food to wash their hands, etc., before serving it. Those people should not have to be afraid to eat at a restaurant for fear of catching something.

Not only is it absolutely unnecessary for anyone to catch hepatitis from poor hygiene, but it also creates bad publicity for the restaurants and the city where the disease originated.

This certification would ensure that good hygiene is being practiced, and it would hopefully eliminate, or at least lessen, the number of hepatitis cases found. — T.M.S.

VWC should be able to raise funds for center

Virginia Wesleyan College has been awarded a $350,000 challenge grant by the Kresge Foundation.

The grant was awarded to help Virginia Wesleyan build a $2.4 million campus center.

In order to receive the grant, the school must raise $3 for every $1 of the grant by Feb. 1, which comes out to approximately $1.1 million.

Before the grant was awarded, Virginia Wesleyan had raised approximately $1 million for the new campus center.

Give 'em 'show-biz' food

By Phyllis T. Stein
Correspondent

My daughter sounded a little frazzled when she phoned.

"Would you please tell me what kind of milk drink you fix the kids when they stay with you," she asked. "Isn't it just skimmed milk with a little vanilla and nutmeg like you used to fix for me?"

"That's it," I said. "Well darn it! They won't drink it when I fix it," she went on. "They swear your tastes better."

The next time they came over we found out what was lacking in her recipe. By far the most important ingredient in cooking for kids is Showbiz! With a little bit of razzle dazzle, a plain glass of skimmed milk is turned into NECTAH FOR THE GODS!

I actually shout that when I place the foaming glass in front of the kids. It never fails. They gulp it down and stick out their glasses for seconds, two grinning, freckled-faced little blonds with white foam mustachios sighing, "More grandma."

Actually it's a trick I learned from my father. I would have eaten a cardboard box if he fixed it for me. As a child, I hated grapefruit except when it was served by my dad. He would carefully scallop the rind in perfect little points. Then he would slice through the membrane and remove all the seeds. After sprinkling it thoroughly with white sugar, he would top it off with a marachino cherry and in a terrible French accent inquire "Fruit de jour, madam!" I didn't know fruit de jour means beans de pinto, but I was convinced that anything that grand certainly couldn't be grapefruit.

I don't approve of fast foods and frizzy drinks for growing children so sometimes I resort to a little fancy footwork in order to compete with Ronald MacDonald.

The eggnog, for instance, requires more or less a cup of milk, a drollup of sugar, one drop of vanilla and a dash of nutmeg. More important is the glass. It has to be big enough to contain the milk and a two-inch foamy head.

Still more important is the ability to have fun. A favorite scenario goes like this: The kids play the part of the diner and all other roles are played by grandma. First the snooty maitre'd seats the children. Suddenly, he turns into a mad waiter who grabs a dish towel and flails the table, chairs and children in search of errant crumbs.

After everyone settles down, "Me sewer" and "Ma damme" are asked if they "veesh to ordaire." Kids watch enough Pepe le Pew cartoons to catch on quick so without missing a beat they arch their eyebrows and intone, "I shall haf a glass of eck nog pleeze wiz sugaire and noot-meg."

That is the signal for the chef who whirls into action. Plucking a tall glass from the cabinet he first holds it to the light for inspection. Milk is poured in — one drollup, two drollups. Next the vanilla, precisely one drop, but first the bottle is passed under the nose like a fine wine. A scant ¼ teaspoon of sugar is delicately sprinkled from the tip of a spoon, and finally the "noot meg" — one dash. Now is the time for each chef to show his individuality. One can beat the concoction in short bursts in a blender, use an old fashioned eggbeater or, my personal favorite, the frenzied fork method.

Holding the glass slightly tilted in the left hand, you beecaaaat the mixture with a fork until a satisfying foam appears. The glass is lifted once more to the light and then, ever so gently placed in front of the fortunate recipient with a victorious cry "NECTAH FOR THE GODS." Kids can't resist it.

Off the Record

By Tina Swedler

Spring fever season is here

Spring fever. Everyone has heard of it. Most everyone has had it at one time or another.

Webster's New World Dictionary defines it as "the laziness and listlessness that many people feel during the first warm, sunny days of spring."

Well, I think I have it. But, I don't think of Webster went into enough detail on what spring fever really is.

I am having an especially bad case of it this year, too, because I have caught it earlier than usual (I seem to be one of the lucky ones who catch this dreaded disease every year.)

And you can't understand why your boss makes you stay at work, just like you could never understand why your teachers kept you in school on such nice days.

As I have mentioned in previous columns, I recently moved to Hampton Roads from Chicago. Chicago is "affectionately" known as the "Windy City" and there is a reason for that. It is windy. And it is cold and windy. The weather that we experience in Hampton Roads in March and April doesn't get to Chicago until about May. Although the calendar says spring officially begins on March 20, Chicago's calendar says it begins somewhere around May 11.

Anyway, I am not used to this gorgeous weather, and I have a bad case of the fever.

Webster talks about the "laziness and listlessness" felt during the "first warm, sunny days of spring." Somehow, I think my disease is going to last longer than the first few warm days of spring. I think it is going to last clear on into the summer.

And I think there's more to the disease than Webster points out. When I get spring fever, I feel lazy and listless only when I am at work. For some reason, when I get out into the sunshine, I am ready to go. I have known other people who have experienced these side effects of the fever. Last spring, the office where I worked was filled with at least a dozen people who just wandered around with a dazed look on their faces.

You know you have spring fever when you feel like you are being punished because you have to go back to work on such a nice day. You feel like you are regressing back to your childhood because you want to play "hooky." And you can't understand why your boss makes you stay at work, just like you could never understand why your teachers kept you in school on such nice days.

So, you go back to work, and then you stand outside the building until the very last minute, and rush inside so as not to be late. You throw yourself right into your work, hoping that if you keep yourself busy, you won't think about all the other things you could be doing. But, it doesn't usually work. You work like mad — for a whole five minutes, and then you find yourself staring out your window. If you are lucky enough to have a window. If you don't, like me, you find yourself staring off into space.

You also know you have spring fever when you find yourself sighing a lot. You may not even notice it at first, but someone may come up to you and ask you what is wrong, and you will realize what you have been doing. And, if you find yourself sighing while staring out a window or looking off into space, then you know you

Standards board a possibility for teachers

Rob Jones,
president,
Virginia Beach
Education Association

The Carnegie Report of 1986 began what is currently referred to as the Reform Movement in education.

Few have doubted the need to reform; however, the events of the years between May, 1986, and April, 1988, have produced little in terms of meaningful reform.

The Carnegie Report legitimized the Virginia Education Association (VEA) and National Education Association (NEA) goal of professional standards boards for teachers by proposing "A National Board for Professional Teaching Standards."

The formation of a National Board for Professional Teaching Standards, a key step toward improving the quality of teaching, was announced on Feb. 18 of this year. Now, Virginia must decide whether or not to make the same commitment to elevating and empowering the teaching profession. There are compelling arguments in favor of just that.

The teaching profession is in danger. Sixty percent of the teachers now in the classroom will retire before the year 2000. Approximately 25 percent of college graduates must go into teaching to replace retiring teachers. Currently only 6 percent of college freshmen indicate a desire to become teachers. Something must be done.

If teaching is to become a more attractive career, the prestige of the profession must be elevated. Theodore Sizer's "Horace's Compromise" suggest that three things signal societal respect for a profession — money, recognition and autonomy.

Presently, the money is not there. While willing to pay six million to a linebacker, our society places little value on the worth of teachers.

Teachers, nurses and secretaries are undervalued in our society because we have historically undervalued the worth of the contributions of women to our society, and these have been viewed as women's jobs.

Virginia still lags behind the national average in teacher pay, and the relaxation of state mandates in the next biennial budget is a step backwards.

Virginia's teachers may lose ground on the national average over the next two years. As a nation we underpay teachers, a fact that makes the national average teacher salary a questionable long-term goal.

Every politician loves education when running for office. They invariably promise to do something about teacher salaries as part of their platforms. Yet, when in office, they play the shell game of saying we can't do it — the locality, state or federal government should.

City level officials blame the localities and the federal government. The federal government says the states and localities should do more. The problem is never adequately addressed.

Recognition of the profession is declining. Indeed, 52 percent of parents say they would be unhappy if their children went into teaching. Sadly, for teachers who are parents, the percentage was higher. The respect afforded teachers in Japan is unlikely to occur in our country in our lifetimes.

Autonomy is the only one of the three options that is cheap. What more compelling argument could a taxpayer need? The issue is simply giving teachers a greater voice in the decisions that affect their professional performance. The Carnegie Report put it this way, "School systems based on bureaucratic authority must be replaced by schools in which authority is grounded in the professional competence of the teacher."

Teachers, like doctors, lawyers and accountants, are perfectly capable of governing their own profession. A Virginia board composed of a majority of teachers and including civic and higher education leaders could eventually license teachers to practice, recognize teachers' professional certificates and approve the content of teacher preparation programs.

Virginia Beach Education Association (VBEA) delegates to the VEA's 1988 Delegate Assembly (DA) will consider this question as the first "New Business Item" on Friday, April 14. The resolution before the VEA/DA will read, "... NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that the Virginia Education Association seek legislation establishing a professional standards board for the teaching profession composed of a majority of classroom teachers to establish standards for entry to the teaching profession."

This resolution is conservative in keeping with the Virginia way. If the board works well, perhaps then we should align with Utah and increase the power of the board to include prescribing regulations for the issuance, non-issuance and renewal of teacher certificates.

This limited proposal, which focuses on teacher input into the preparation and training of future teachers, is a positive first step toward elevating the teaching profession in Virginia.

I urge support for a Virginia professional standards board for the teaching profession.

Spring fire safety tips

Martin Grube,
Virginia Beach
master firefighter

Now that spring is here, we will all be doing those chores around the house that we put off all winter. Please follow these few safety tips so that your spring cleaning will be over quickly and without any injury to yourself and bystanders.

•Painting — Do not use gasoline to clean paint brushes. Use only paint thinners and other approved paint brush cleaners. Open windows in the room in which you are painting to keep

•Step ladders — Please check the wooden type ladders for cracked rungs or loose steps. Please have someone hold the ladder when you are on it and please watch for overhead electrical wires; they can kill.

Your Virginia Beach professional firefighters will be spring cleaning also. We have every inch of fire hose to test and every fire hydrant in the city will be inspected. Drop by and visit your firefighters and ask for a pamphlet on fire safety. Test your smoke detectors and think fire safety.

Road to Independence Boulevard which will be under construction in September; the Baxter Road flyover which will be under construction this summer; Independence Boulevard phase 3, which is eight lanes from Holland Road to Jeannie Drive which will be under construction in June 1990; Independence Boulevard, phase 2, included in the referendum from Holland Road to Princess Anne Road which will be under construction this summer; Constitution Drive, a state project which will be under construction in the spring of 1992; and Independence Boulevard, phase 4, to six lanes, which will be under construction in the fall of 1991.

Lambert said that the Constitution Drive project started as a simple project to bring the road over Route 44, but the cost of the project has been increased from $3 to $4 million to $19 million and "will probably be over $30 million because of the need for three interchanges.

An update of the transportation analysis is needed, he said, regardless of the CBD concept and whether or not the city adopts the light rail concept Lambert said.

Among the critical issues Lambert listed are;

• Independence Boulevard north of Jeannie Drive and its ability to handle traffic.

• With the construction of Constitution Drive what will happen north of Virginia Beach Boulevard?

• The design of Jeannie, Constitution and Independence.

• The relationship of the Euclid area and Pocahontas Village to the Pembroke area.

• The impact of the light rail system.

• The future role of Bonney Road, a state project where an at-grade intersection is proposed.

• Consideration of additional routes.

• Providing for pedestrians in the area.

• The effect of Baxter Road and Bonney Road on the area.

Lambert said that the analysis would provide a document for a master plan for the development of a Central Business District.

Lambert said that the city had asked the Virginia Department of Transportation to make the analysis but was told that the state would not expand the constitution Drive design project beyond Constitution Drive.

Lambert said that the proposal was not a response to the CBD organization but that the city's analysis would be coordinated with the CBD study.

Mayor Robert G. Jones instructed Lambert to return with the consultant's proposal in 60 days.

CZO Discussions

Earlier, council had discussed

Wright supports minimum sizes

variance to the setback requirements and/or the minimum lot coverage requirements for structures, arguing that you cannot get a decent size house on the small lot without a variance.

The homeowner then goes to the Board of Zoning Appeals for a variance to park his recreational vehicle in the front yard because there is not enough space to get the vehicle behind the building line of the home. Next comes the variance for a swimming pool.

Small lots, do not work, Wright says, unless variances are obtained.

Wright, as a member of the Mayor's Task Force on the city's appearance, recently proposed a number of changes in the zoning ordinance which would improve the city's appearance.

In his letter to Moss, Wright submits documentation showing that courts have supported council's right to set minimum lot sizes. Only in cases where the minimum is considered exclusionary have the localities run into any trouble and those cases in which the minimum sizes were two areas or more. He maintains that a minimum lot size of 10,000 square feet could not be considered exclusionary.

In answer to developer's claims that smaller lot sizes allow the construction of affordable house, Wright asks where Moss has seen any reliable figures that demonstrate the relationship between minimum lot size and the cost of the dwelling.

First Colonial grads at MU

Two First Colonial High School graduates finished the season with the Marymont University men's basketball team, which completed its first year of competition with a 13-9 record.

The following information was given about Steve Dolieslager, a 6'1" freshman guard, and Rob Harris, a 6'6" freshman center:

Dolieslager, son of Lawrence and Sandra Dolieslager, averaged 6.3 points, 3.2 rebounds and 3.1 assists per game during the season. He scored in double figures five times with games of 11, 10, 10, 16 and 13 points.

The biology major hit on four out of five three-point shots against Wilmington College to help rally his team to a 75-74 win. Against Washington Bible College, Dolieslager had triple doubles and 13 points, 10 rebounds and 10 assists as the Saints won 121-56.

In his teams win at Christendom College, Dolieslager made two jump shots in the last minute of play to rally his team from a four-point deficit and then made a key pass to Harris, his first Colonial teammate, who scored the winning basket for Marymont's 98-96 win.

Harris, son of Dave and Jerry Harris, moved into the starting lineup midway into the season and remained a starter for the rest of the year. He averaged 6.5 points and 6.9 rebounds per game. His field goal percentage was 51.2 percent and his free throw percentage was 58.1 percent.

Harris was in double figures in scoring four times and double figures in rebounding six times. His high in scoring was 17 points at Christendom and his high in rebounds was also 17 at home against Bridgewater College.

Harris is a computer science major.

Fund raising

The amount awarded is the largest grant in the college's history. The school began a $9 million fund-raising effort last year that is projected to last five years. Approximately $5.6 million has already been raised, according to school officials.

The school's goal is to raise approximately $7 million for buildings and equipment, which includes the new campus center, $1.5 million for operating expenses and $500,000 for endowment.

The school already has underway one construction project and plans are set for another.

The Kresge Foundation has shown great foresight in awarding Virginia Wesleyan the $350,000 grant.

The school already has raised over half of the needed money. This shows that it is serious and is making a tremendous effort at reaching its goal and building the campus.

The Kresge Foundation is not only giving Virginia Wesleyan money, but even more incentive to raise money itself.

The school should be able to raise the $1.1 million requested of it by the foundation. Virginia Wesleyan should have a new $2.4 million campus center within the next couple of years. — T.M.S.

The students will be honored and presented with plaques during a formal ceremony on Friday, April 1, in Washington, D.C.

Jennifer, a visually impaired student, is vice president of the Future Business Leaders of America (FBLA) at Green Run High School; she also serves as chairman for evening FBLA meetings.

Gregory, a trainable mentally retarded student at CEL, is a food service worker at the Holland Road and South Plaza Trail location of Kentucky Fried Chicken.

"Yes I Can!" was established by the foundation in 1981 to acknowledge the achievements of disabled children and youth, to overcome barriers caused by disabilities or public misconceptions. It also is designed to encourage disabled children and youth to seek their highest potential, and to increase public awareness of the abilities, aspirations, and normal personal qualities of disabled people. "Yes I Can!" is funded by a grant from the Shell Companies Foundation.

definitely have been stricken, and probably with a severe case.

The last symptom of the disease is when you find yourself "getting ready" to leave work long before you are supposed to leave. If you get off work at 5 p.m., you will probably find yourself straightening up your desk at 4:45, and then when it is two minutes to five, you get ready to run out the door. You stare at the minute hand willing it to move, and when it gets up to the top, and it is exactly 5 p.m., you are "outta there."

So, now the question is, what can be done about this? Well, I don't have the answer. I have been coming down with this disease ever since I can remember, and no one has found a cure, or even a vaccine, yet. And, like I said earlier, I have an exceptionally bad case of it this year, because I have caught it earlier than usual. I guess I will just have to suffer through it like any other illness, and just hope it goes away.

But, if there is no column from me next week, you will know why.

Eagle Forum

officers announced

The Eagle Forum of Virginia has announced the following officers for 1988-89:

Ruth S. Talley, Chesapeake, president; Frank White, Virginia Beach, vice president; Valerie Muhlenbruch, Norfolk, secretary; and Kathy Gordon, Virginia Beach, treasurer.

The Eagle Forum, founded by Phyllis Schlafly, is a bi-partisan, pro-family, non-profit organization which addresses matters affecting the family.

Oil recycling gains momentum

The Southeastern Public Service Authority (SPSA) is helping cities maintain a clean environment by providing a free waste oil disposal service for do-it-yourself auto mechanics.

Hampton Roads residents can now get rid of oil removed from cars at the Virginia Beach and Chesapeake municipal waste transfer stations. SPSA has installed a 275-gallon tank at each site as part of a three-month pilot program.

According to Russ Powell, SPSA public information officer, SPSA is also attempting to increase awareness about the adverse effects of improper waste oil disposal. Last year, 4.4 million gallons of oil was disposed of improperly in Virginia, Powell said. Most often, he said, the oil is simply dumped on the ground. It then seeps into the ground water.

The service will be provided at the Virginia Beach Oceana Transfer Station at 2520 Virginia Beach Blvd. and the Chesapeake Transfer Station at 901 Hollowell Lane. Trained personnel will accept the oil from 7 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Mondays through Fridays and 7 a.m. to noon on Saturdays.

Depending on the response, said Powell, the service may become permanent.

Francis Elrod

administrator was raised on a farm, the same farm on which his father was raised. "There was a lot of family stability," she said.

The goal of Elrod's parents was to see their children educated. "Some of my siblings remember the depression years. It was a sacrifice for my parents to send us all to college."

While growing up, the Elrod children all did chores and learned to share.

"We had to be creative and innovative. There weren't a lot of playmates where we lived," she said.

Immediately after graduating high school, Elrod attended the University of Tennessee. She went to summer school for three summers so that she could graduate early. "At that time we wanted to get out of school as soon as possible because of the war effort," she said.

Elrod graduated college in 1943 with a degree in social service and married J. D. Elrod in 1944. She met her husband while teaching in Benton, Tenn. Her husband was in the army, and following WWII, they came to live in Hampton Roads. They then left this area and lived in Charleston, S.C. for four years while he obtained a degree.

Upon arriving in Hampton Roads, Elrod became director of the Nansemond County Social Services. She was then transferred to Virginia Beach Social Services in 1959, where she has been ever since.

The agency deals with many types of problems, including child abuse, adult abuse, the homeless, foster care, Medicare and Medicaid. Most of the money used by the agency is allocated by the federal government, according to Elrod.

She said the staff members at the agency try to prevent a crisis before it actually becomes a crisis. For example, the court mediation program deals with couples exploring divorce. The court refers these couples with children to the agency. The agency then works with the parents and encourages them to draw up a contract to determine visitation rights so that they do not use the child or children to hurt each other. "We try to keep them together as a family," Elrod said.

The agency also is involved with custody battles. "Most custody battles are referred to us for investigation," she said.

In dealing with child abuse, the Virginia Beach agency has more referrals than any other locality in the state, Elrod said. The agency first must determine if abuse does exist, and then a type of treatment must be developed, Elrod said.

The agency also helps mothers with employment services while they are on Aid to Dependent Children, according to Elrod. The agency teaches them how to seek a job, informs them of work experience opportunities and helps them find day-care facilities.

Although Elrod has been doing the same job since 1959, she said she has no intentions of leaving anytime soon. "There are constant changes. It's exciting work," she said.

Elrod said some people tell her that it is a good idea to change jobs every so many years, but she doesn't feel she has to. "Working in Virginia Beach is almost like having moved to another locale — with the growth and changes in the city and the federal and state governments."

She said she enjoys her work and likes to see results. Elrod said she likes to see children become well, marriages that seemed to be destroyed come together and children adopted.

"It is the right of individuals in our society to have the essentials — food, clothing, shelter, but it is also the right of individuals to have a family and someone to love them."

Elrod said that she must be creative and innovative in her job. "Even more so now, because of the cutbacks in funding from the federal and state government."

Elrod has spent her entire life helping people. She said she loves to create new programs. She was one of the founders of the Tidewater Detention Home; the Hospice of Virginia Beach; a group home; and a battered wives shelter. "I love to do those things that will be permanent, lasting services," she said.

She said she was raised in such a way that she felt obligated to give. "If I have something to offer society, in this niche, then I do what I know best."

The Chesapeake resident has one son, Richard, who is an engineer with the Norfolk Naval Shipyard, and also enjoys real estate work.

Elrod plans to continue her social service work, and she also is interested in legislative work; what laws need to be changed, etc. She added that she would someday like to go back to school to get a law degree and go to work on the juvenile court bench.

Elrod said she is always looking for opportunities to be stimulated and challenged.

"It goes back to creativity and innovation. If I am encouraged and challenged, I can accomplish some of the things I have talked about."

New city Employee Committee announced

In an effort to improve cooperation between the city of Virginia Beach, utility companies, and the development community, the city acted on an employee-initiated idea to establish a Utility Coordination Committee including representatives from the agencies concerned.

The function of the committee is to facilitate communication between agencies and to deal with issues such as the city's plan review process, standardization of work hour restrictions and traffic control procedures, the highway permit issuing process and the city's capital improvement plans.

According to a press release, the most impressive accomplishment is a pilot project for coordination of utility installations in the new Christopher Farms subdivision in Virginia Beach.

The engineering firm and the developer decided to involve the utility companies in the pre-design phases of the project. While the project is not yet complete, the coordinated approach has been deemed a success by the agencies involved. The utilities were able to plan service before it was needed, to share easement space, and in one instance, to joint trench.

The benefits to the developer, according to the press release, include the use of less easement space, the installation of all utilities prior to final landscaping and a substantial savings in time.

The city of Virginia Beach gains a more visually appealing neighborhood, with utility boxes installed in backyards, and fewer complaints from citizens whose yards won't be dug up for utility installation after landscaping.

While the city took the lead in organizing the committee, it is now up to the individual agencies to use these methods among themselves, the press release stated.

Tuck Bowie, executive vice president of Talbot and Associates, the engineering firm responsible for the Christopher Farms project, said in a press release, "I don't know that we solved any great mysteries, but we have established lines of communication. We have implemented an internal policy to let everyone know what's going on. This process has let us know who to call in other companies and what their procedures are. I feel that our firm has an advantage because we know that and we will continue to use this process whenever possible."

For further information, contact Phil Davenport in the Virginia Beach Department of Public Works at 427-4167.

Seventy-one cases have been reported in Virginia Beach so far this year, compared to four in 1987. Part of the reason for this may be attributed to better reporting of cases this year than last, Sjolund said.

Restaurants in Virginia Beach are inspected by the health department on a regular basis, depending on how well the operation is going, Sjolund said. For example, if there have been recent problems regarding sanitation of a certain restaurant, that restaurant would be inspected more frequently than a restaurant without any problems. Restaurants are inspected at least once every four months, no matter how they are run, he added.

The inspection criteria will not change, he said. "There is nothing wrong with the criteria. We really need to have managers in the restaurants being very aware of the problem."

NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING
The Virginia Beach City Council will hold a public hearing at 2:00 p.m. on Monday, April 18, 1988 in the City Council Chambers. The purpose of this public hearing is to receive comments from the public and consider for adoption an updated Zoning Ordinance and other related ordinances and policies.
The ordinances and policies being proposed have been revised based in part on comments received at previous public hearings. In addition to various proposed text changes to the Zoning Ordinance, certain changes are proposed as follows:

1. Various zoning map changes to create new districts applicable to some oceanfront and bayfront residential areas; to create new office district; and to create a district recognizing vested rights of development where applicable regulations would otherwise be changed.
2. The retitling of certain zoning categories.
3. A report with Recommendations for Improved Management of Environmental Resources.
4. A stormwater Management Ordinance applicable to the entire city.
5. A Handbook of Landscaping, Screening and Buffering Specifications and Standards.
6. A set of proposed amendments to the Subdivision Ordinance to supplement those proposed in the Comprehensive Zoning Ordinance. Specifically, changes to Sections 4.4, 9.2, 9.3, and 9.4 of the Subdivision Ordinance are proposed.
7. The adoption of certain administrative policies and procedures intended to support the above, as spelled out in a document entitled "A discussion Paper Regarding Update of the Comprehensive Zoning Ordinance and Other Ordinances."
8. Certain additional changes being considered include changes to minimum lot sizes, setbacks and parking requirements in certain districts, zero-lot-line development, and conditional zoning.

Additionally, City Council will also consider increases of fees and imposition of new fees related to the Zoning Ordinance proposed as follows:

1. A fee of $10 for an occupancy permit pursuant to Section 103(g) of the CZO. Such proposal will result in an increase of $5 over the present fee.
2. Imposition of a fee of $125 for an application to enlarge extend or convert a non-conforming use or structure pursuant to Section 105(d) and (e) of the CZO.
3. A fee of $100 for every appeal to the Board of Zoning Appeals for a variance from the requirements of Section 205 of the CZO. Such proposal will result in an increase of $90 over the present fee.
4. A fee of $100 for all other appeals to the Board of Zoning Appeals. Such proposal will result in an increase of $50.
5. Imposition of a fee of $500 for conditional zoning applications pursuant to proposed Section 107(g) of the CZO.

The foregoing proposed fees are unauthorized by Section 15.1-491(f) of the Code of Virginia and by Section 2.02(e) of the Charter of the City of Virginia Beach.

The foregoing description of proposed plans, ordinance and amendments may not be exhaustive of all matters which may be considered. Therefore, all interested persons are encouraged to examine the full text of such proposed plans, ordinances, amendments, and fee changes with which reference is hereby made. Copies of the proposed plans, ordinances, amendments, and fee changes as well as documentation and justification for the proposed fees may be examined during normal business hours in the Office of the City Planning Department, 2405 Courthouse Drive, Virginia Beach, VA 23456.

Extensive fire safety plan slated

In an effort to assure Virginia Beach visitors and citizens of the city's commitment toward fire safety regarding hotel and motel occupancy, City Manager Aubrey V. Watts Jr., made public an extensive action plan that was distributed to the Virginia Beach City Council, according to a press release.

The month-long effort culminated in an itemized listing of steps to be taken to provide maximum protection of hotel visitors, within the realm of responsibility permitted by the city.

According to the press release, the majority of hotel/motel construction standards and their related fire protection systems are addressed in the state building code limiting the city with regard to many requirements it can place on the facilities.

According to the press release, City Manager Watts has implemented the following actions:

- Every hotel/motel in Virginia Beach will be inspected by appropriate city personnel a minimum of two times per year;
- All hotels will be inspected by the beginning of the 1988 tourist season;

• Certificates of Occupancy will not be issued until fire inspectors certify that corresponding fire protection systems are fully operational;

• A fire inspector will be assigned to work in the Department of Permits and Inspections to assist in site and construction plan review;

• The fire department staff, with the cooperation of the Hotel Motel Association has stepped up its education/prevention activities with hotel/motel personnel, providing seminars and literature, as well as videotaped training films;

• An Automatic Permit Tracking System has been installed which will automatically report on a two-week schedule the status of any partial or temporary occupancy permit which may have been issued; and

• The fire chief and director of Permits and Inspections have been directed to perform a comprehensive review of the appropriate state code sections and provide a report for possible inclusion in the city's upcoming legislative package for consideration by city council (late summer) followed by consideration by next year's General Assembly.

"It is the City's intention," said Watts in the press release, "to provide not only protection in the fire safety issue, but peace of mind, in this area, as well, for both our visitors and our citizens. While there's always room for improvement with such a complex issue as fire prevention and safety, we find sometimes that our hands are tied by the state laws that permit such a variance of rules and regulations. We hope to address this issue thoroughly in the upcoming year, through proper legislative channels."

Fire Chief Harry Diezel said in a press release, "Over the past 14 years, there have been only four fire fatalities in this setting. Three were associated with careless smoking and alcohol and the fourth was caused by a faulty electrical device. Our past safety record compares quite favorably to national statistics and is due to a combination of good fortune, early fire detection, prompt emergency response and efficient extinguishment. As a narrow focus, any loss of life or property in our hotel environment is unacceptable. We will continue our efforts to prevent such events."
